

Krogdahl to run UK physics professor wants to stay on job during campaign

By KATHI MILLIMET
Kernel Staff Writer

UK physics professor Wasley S. Krogdahl has asked the Board of Trustees for a waiver to allow him to run for Congress.

The Board will take up his request at today's meeting in Louisville.

A University regulation requires that a faculty member running for office must take a leave of absence without pay, said Student Government President Scott T. Wendelsdorf in a telephone interview Sunday night.

Krogdahl announced Saturday his plans to run on the American Party ticket for the special Sixth Congressional District election. A press conference was held at his home.

Wendelsdorf said Krogdahl wrote to President Singletary requesting the waiver and that Singletary is supporting the proposal.

Singletary was unavailable for comment.

On own time

Wendelsdorf also said Krogdahl plans to campaign "solely on his own time" and will not let it interfere with his job on campus.

Wendelsdorf rejected Krogdahl's proposal and said he supports "definite clarification of the regulation" so those wishing to run for an office won't have to take a proposal for a waiver to the Board of Trustees.

Krogdahl said he will run a campaign "based on the issues."

In domestic affairs, Krogdahl cited "big government" as a major issue. Calling the wage-price freeze "political tyranny," he charged President Nixon has intruded "into the affairs of citizens by setting wage and price controls."

Commenting on the U.S. and her "weakness in foreign affairs," Krogdahl declared "we are not the world's greatest power, the Soviet Union is. The difference between us is overwhelming—we will have to accept a Soviet dictatorship."

Russia 'afraid'

With reference to the statement that Russia is just as afraid of the U.S. as the U.S. is of Russia, the professor said, "Perhaps more so. That's why we need a show of strength—they interpret conciliation as weakness, we don't."

Concerning Red China, Krogdahl said "if they're not our enemies, we just don't have one."

"Communist China, not Turkey, is the supplier of 80 percent of the illegal heroin in the U.S. It is grown on state-run farms by slave labor," he added.

On the home front, Krogdahl favors a "more strict constructionist" stand in the Supreme Court. "I believe that is what the framers of the Constitution wanted when they set it up," he commented.

Krogdahl is the faculty advisor of the campus chapter of the John Birch Society. He correlated the Society with George Wallace of the American Party by saying, "I believe most Americans are conservatives."

Voting day for the special election to fill the unexpired term of the late John C. Watts is Dec. 4. The new representative will serve about a year.

'Harrisburg 8' nun raps on peace drive

By MIKE BOARD
Kernel Staff Writer

On Jan. 13, 1971, Sister Elizabeth McAlister, Father Philip Berigan and four others were indicated by a federal grand jury in Harrisburg, Pa. The defendants were charged with plotting to kidnap Presidential Advisor, Henry Kissinger and sabotage of the heating systems of several federal buildings in Washington, D.C.

The alleged bombings were to have taken place on Feb. 22, with Kissinger being kidnapped the following day.

Sister Elizabeth, a 31 year-old Roman Catholic nun and art history teacher at Marymount College, Tarrytown, N.Y., was also accused of attempting to smuggle in several letters to the Federal Penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa. where Berrigan was in prison. The letters supposedly contained plans of the plot.

On April 30, new indictments were issued broadening the alleged conspiracy to include a series of draft board raids. In the indictments, two new defendants were added, making up "The Harrisburg Eight."

Sister Elizabeth was accused of raising the idea "to kidnap someone like Kissinger" and "to issue a set of demands on the war."

The following is an interview with Sister Elizabeth, who was in Lexington recently to raise funds for The Harrisburg Defense Committee.

Kernel: How successful has the Vietnam anti-war movement been?

McAlister: I think the movement, in the five to six years it has been active, has succeeded only in forcing the administration to change the names of what its doing in Southeast Asia and to become more secretive. The administration has worked politically to push the war into the background. So much so, that not even somebody like Senator George McGovern is talking about it as a campaign issue.

Kernel: What do you think will happen to the movement once the U.S. is totally out of Vietnam?

McAlister: I wish that were the problem. I see at least five more years. We're as deeply into Cambodia and Laos as we are Vietnam. So that to say what will happen to the anti-war movement after Vietnam isn't realistic for at least another five years. But in the meantime, we're into at least 25 other countries, in what I'd term "secret wars."

Kernel: What can be done to return the movement to what it originally was, as exemplified by the moratoriums and student concern when the U.S. entered Cambodia?

Start over

McAlister: I'm kind of convinced we have to go back to start all over again. What was responsible for the beginning were the teach-ins heard all across the country. That hasn't been since 1965. The consciousness responsible for what we had of the movement, came out of that. So I think we've got to try teach-ins again. And talk about these new names, new words, and what these mean.

Kernel: Do you think President Nixon is withdrawing troops from Vietnam as part of his campaign strategy for the election in '72?

McAlister: Sure. Troop levels are lower than they've been since 1966. And he is at pains to tell us that. He's making an issue of the fact that American casualties are down, now something like 10 a week.

In 1969 the Nixon administration was sending out an average of 55 bombing missions a month. In 1971, up to October, we were sending out an average of 170 missions. Bu he doesn't tell us that.

During the Johnson Administration, we had something like 90,000 casualties a week. During the Nixon Administration we have something like 135,000 a week. But we're winding down the war.

Kernel: Do you think Nixon will be re-elected in '72?
McAlister: I fear in my gut

this is true. It's discouraging, but it's true.

Kernel: Who then would you want to see as our next president?

McAlister: I haven't seen anybody that's got the support and power. I think President Nixon is a masterful politician. And I think somebody Henry Kissinger is very much responsible for a lot of that. It's brilliant the way he has done it. So much so, that he forced somebody like McGovern to say the war wasn't an issue. He's very clever.

Kernel: Why did you consider, in the conversation at Egbal Ahmad's summer home, kidnapping Henry Kissinger?

Dramatic action?

McAlister: Some people might be tempted to think in terms of dramatic action as the way out. But that's something that occurs to you in a moment of discouragement or anger. Something of that sort.

Frustration perhaps would be the best word for it. And you realize painfully that's not going to do anything.

What really has to be done is a very slow painful process of redefining a movement against the war. And actions that are dramatic are almost the easy way out from the harder, painful, less rewarding work that needs to be done.

Kernel: What has been the reaction to these events by the public and your peers in the Catholic Church?

McAlister: One of the most amazing things that I think has happened is that a group of people could be indicted of bombing and kidnapping and could meet with public sympathy.

I've talked to a lot of groups of people and I'd say that the generality of the response I've received is positive.

Crosses lines

Now that crosses line of church groups, religious groups, totally secular groups, college and university groups. Some of the toughest groups to talk to have been our own alumni. People I went to school with or taught. And even there I can say that I've experienced a measure of hostility and anger. But that's the exception rather than the rule.

When I've talked to people, they look at me and they say, "you, conspiracy to bomb and kidnap?" And I don't have to say anything about it. They just don't believe that's possible and they think it's silly.

Kernel: Do you think "The Harrisburg Eight" will receive a fair trial?

McAlister: I don't know what that means. I think that I'd have to say basically that I believe in people.

I think Harrisburg was specifically chosen because Harrisburg is the least likely place where we would get a sympathetic hearing.

But I think that in choosing Harrisburg, it is a determination of people, or a sense that people can be determined. The government really underestimates the power people have to make a difference. And they can discern right from wrong, good from bad, and something that was substance from something silly.

Evidence?

Kernel: What evidence would the government present against "The Harrisburg Eight" at the trial?

McAlister: Look, they have lots of things that I don't know anything about. We've had an admission from the government they've engaged in wire tapping. How extensive is that, I don't know. There's lots of things that I don't have any access to. But even if I knew, I couldn't and wouldn't discuss it. It has to be dealt with in a courtroom with due respect for the process of justice.

Kernel: Do you regret having written those letters to Father Philip Berrigan?

McAlister: Once again you're assuming that I did and I'm not saying to you that I did or didn't. I can't say that. That's an allegation against me. That's something the court has to prove.

Can wastes be recycled?

Ag prof studies manure

Dr. E. J. Ross, of the UK agriculture engineering department, said if the population continues to grow at its present rate, two and a half times as much protein will be needed by that population by the 21st century.

One good potential source of protein is in animal manure. Ross said chickens use only 50 percent of the protein in their feed. The other 50 percent is in their waste.

"Our major efforts are in considering the problem of utilization. When animals eat food only part of it is utilized, a great deal of nutrients are in their wastes," Ross said.

Ross is studying the potential of animal waste as food and the problem of its disposal, which relates to environmental pollution.

Ross's work involves the use of the fermentation technique to improve animal waste. "Our research efforts are trying to do something with manure to improve its feed value," said Ross.

Poultry use less feed

Poultry can generally utilize feed better than any other domestic animal (more poundage for less feed). But still it takes 11 pounds of dry feed to get one pound of dry meat from the poultry. The chicken loses 50 percent of its protein intake in its feces. "If we can recycle the feces (feed it back to the bird) we can greatly increase the overall feed efficiency of the bird."

The study of the eating of manures is called coprophagy.

Another reason for studying waste is that domestic animal waste is almost 10 times greater in volume than human waste. It is important that "real good means of getting rid of manure" are found.

Ross's research in regard to pollution is "work relating to the rates at which animal waste material can be decomposed by microorganism." Presently waste material is being put in the earth or dumped in a body of water, called a lagoon, where water decomposes the waste.

Other University studies have tried to feed the waste back to the animal directly with little or no treatment to the feces. Some University studies have fed chicken manure to other animals.

"Animals do eat manure (of other species) naturally." It is common for rats to eat their feces when their diet is insufficient," Ross said.

Ross says recycling of waste has been practiced for some time, but most of the work has come in the last 10 years. UK's recycling work began five years ago.

Party machinery chews up democracy in the Watts 'special' election

Twenty days from today central Kentuckians go to the polls to choose someone to speak for them for the House of Representatives.

They don't know yet who will run for that post, left vacant by the death of John C. Watts. Furthermore, it is apparent that the three major parties don't really care.

Gov. Louie B. Nunn has set a "special election" for the south district house seat for Dec. 4. Republican bigwigs will choose their party's candidate in an elite session tonight. Democrats and American party members plan to follow up with sessions of their own. And all in all, the public will have less than three weeks to be introduced to, examine, and decide which man they will vote for.

The Kernel called a month ago for an orderly, decentralized selection process for the successor to Mr. Watts. Now the mistake of leaving the selection of candidates to an elite group is being compounded by giving the public only a few weeks to examine the men they will vote for.

It's not difficult to say what will probably come out of the three parties' hasty conferences. The logical choices for candidates are either local big names or handsome unknown who can quickly build an image around themselves. When winning is so important to the parties, honesty and ability are all too often casualties of industrial accidents in the party machinery.

Right-wing opposition to a liberal Nixon?

While much media attention has been focused on gadfly Pete McCloskey's attempt to deny Richard Nixon his party's nomination in 1972, very little attention has been paid to the growing number of conservatives who oppose his re-nomination.

The wage-price freeze and the trip to China, have convinced a number of former Nixon supporters that the man they nominated in 1968 has betrayed them.

Not surprisingly, this right-wing "Dump Nixon" movement has started in Orange County California, long a bastion of conservative radicalism.

The forces that oppose Nixon, which include columnist William F.

Buckley, probably have little chance of denying Nixon the nomination but they could figure heavily in defining the issues of the campaign.

In short, the apparent selection process for Mr. Watts' successor pretty handily defeats all the basic tenets of the democratic election—it isn't orderly, it isn't fair to the public, and it favors the candidate with money or looks.

And since this election constitutes one half of this district's voice in the affairs of the country, we think it should attempt to live up to those standards, or not be held at all.

and the Southern Strategy to insure his nomination. We shudder to think who the powerbroker in San Diego will be if the disenchanting conservatives gain the upper hand in a national party that already leans too heavily to the right.

More on Josh McDowell

It is really great to be able to hear Christianity presented in the manner in which Josh McDowell presented in his lecture here on campus last week. I hope that all who had the opportunity to hear Josh will seriously consider Jesus of Nazareth, not just as the historical character, but as a Living Person, and will take the time to weigh the facts concerning the claims that Jesus made and His offer of abundant life found by coming into a personal relationship with Him.

Garbage cans needed

I would like to suggest to the University or city of Lexington the possibility of placing garbage cans around the campus at different points to make for easy disposal of litter. The cost would be small in comparison to the return beauty. I am sure they would be beneficial and increase the beauty around us.

Marijuana research story

Serious methodological questions can be raised as to the validity of the results obtained from Dr. Drew's marijuana research as reported recently in the Kernel. One must initially challenge the method of subject selection. The subjects employed in the experiments were volunteers who were given monetary rewards for their participation. They identified themselves as either "chronic" or "light" smokers, or as "straights".

One might wonder what type of person would volunteer for such a study in the first place. Once in the experiment, the subject's individual personality, his motivational forces, his personal attitudes, values and beliefs, his prior experience with other drugs all could have a significant influence on his performance of the assigned tasks.

These extraneous factors were not controlled for in Dr. Drew's experimental design. In one experiment, there was not even a "normal" group against which the results of the "smoking" group could be compared. There was no reliable way to pinpoint the presence of THC as the sole reason for the subjects poor performance on the tasks. Likewise, the statistical analysis employed to indicate the "significant" results was not that which is generally accepted. (The significance level was twice as large as that usually employed.)

Taking everything into consideration, it is quite difficult to accept Dr. Drew's findings without serious reservations.

Sedler helps students get their day in court

By WENDY L. WRIGHT
Assistant Managing Editor

The "day in court" is becoming a way of life for students on many campuses. UK is no exception.

Why?
UK law professor Dr. Robert Sedler has an answer. Sedler has defended a number of UK students' causes, including those of draft resisters Don Pratt and Jay Westbrook (as well as Westbrook's trial on a charge of common law assault), a suit to strike Kentucky's abortion law, and the disorderly conduct cases of students following campus unrest at UK in the spring of 1969.

Sedler's answer?
"You can't separate students' concerns from those of the rest of society."

The student movement began, said Sedler, with the peaking of the civil rights and anti-war movements in the middle of the last decade. With this, he said, students adopted the tactics of their parent movement: the use of the courts for redress and as a hopeful catalyst for social change.

Not just for defense
"The courts can be used not just for their own sake, but for an overall purpose as well," he said. "Such action is not only self-protective, which is kind of a negative tactic, but affirmative as well. In the latter case social change may be instigated by the limited means legal action gives," he added.

The Supreme Court, Sedler said, has expanded its jurisdiction over the past decade, thus giving students a chance to win cases they may have otherwise lost. The federal courts, he said, are "less political" than state courts.

"I don't see that the Warren court was all that liberal, though," he added. "They went about as far within certain limitations as they could. So at the same time, I don't see Nixon's court as having slipped back that far either, though it has pulled back some."

"Busting" started action
Legal action for students began, said Sedler, when they "began to get busted" for demonstrating.

"The real flurry started when students began to get kicked out of school. That wasn't too good, so the courts began to require schools to set up procedural guidelines for fair hearings on such cases," he said.

When violence entered into the picture, though, the courts began to be unsympathetic, Sedler said.

"On the other hand," he said, "when we've gone into court over the first amendment, we've been successful. This can be difficult, though, because you have to persuade the judges that the constitution is set up to let you do what you want to do—which is often against their seeming self-interest."

Unsuccessful efforts to strike the constitutionality of marijuana laws, Sedler said, is one example of this difficulty. "They're not about to do this."

Voting rights 'affirmative'

The recent wave of court activity following the passage of the 26th amendment allowing the vote for 18-to-21 year-olds, however, is "a good example of the affirmative use of the courts," said Sedler.

"This is very frequently the way change comes—by the inconsistency that is set up following important changes in the constitution or in legal precedent. This whole thing will be up in the air until a trend is established," he said.

Sedler cites women's concerns, though still a "developing area."

as being another "quite successful" facet of students' use of the courts to instigate social change.

As for the draft, Sedler said the courts have been "highly sympathetic" towards draft resisters in overturning "high-handed actions" by draft boards.

"This only works, though, for those who have tried to be classified as conscientious objectors," he said.

Won't interfere with war

An unfortunate aspect of court action on the draft, Sedler said, is the fact "they will not interfere with the right of the government to wage war."

"The courts will not come to grips with basic issues such as the morality or legality of the present conflict in Vietnam," he said.

Less taxes go to UK, says study

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP)—Comparative figures supplied by Kentucky schools indicate that taxpayers spent more to educate a full-time undergraduate at Murray and Morehead State Universities last year than to educate one at the University of Kentucky.

The figures tend to demolish a long-held general belief that the state spends more money to educate a student at UK than at its four regional universities.

The comparative figures appear in a staff report to the Interim Legislative Study Commission on Higher Education.

The report also shows that on the average the taxpayer spent just a little less at Western and Eastern than at UK last year.

The state's average cost for undergraduates at the four regional universities was $1,152. An average of $1,033 was spent for undergraduates at UK and its 14 community colleges.

UK harriers ready for SEC championship today

Kentucky's cross country team, fresh from a perfect 15-point score in winning the Kentucky Federation Cross Country Championships at Louisville, defends its 1970 Southeastern Conference crown today.

The Wildcats are undefeated in dual meets this year, taking the measure of Cincinnati, 25-35, Tennessee, 18-37, and Marshall, 15-50.

At the Tennessee Invitational, the Cats Paul Baldwin, 1970 SEC co-champion, set a new course record of 30:17, as UK finished fourth in the 15-team meet. The Calloway Gardens Invitational also saw the Wildcats finish fourth out of 37 teams as Baldwin ran sixth. UK track coach Press Whelan expects this year's conference meet to be the closest from the team standpoint in years.

4-team race

"I expect it to be a four-team race among Alabama, Tennessee, Florida and Kentucky," Whelan said. "Alabama, with four seniors who finished in the top ten last year, has to rank as the favorite. Tennessee is capable if healthy and they showed that last week when they beat Alabama in a dual match. Florida is always in the running and has some outstanding personnel."

"We're beginning to come around," Whelan said. "Dan O'Connell (a senior), Rick Hill (a sophomore), and Maxie Hadley (a freshman), ran their best races of the year at Louisville and our momentum is on the upswing. We're stronger from our second to seventh man than we've ever been, but we don't have the solid, first four like Alabama does."

UK traditionally performs well in the conference championships and Whelan hopes this year will be no different.

Baldwin is key

"We've always been strong in our No. 1 position and Baldwin is out to repeat last year's win," Whelan said. "If some of our young runners come through like we expect they will, we should do all right."

Baldwin defends title

Paul Baldwin, Kentucky's premier cross-country runner, will be four miles closer to the end of his brilliant collegiate career Monday.

That's when the annual SEC championships will be held at the four-mile Roebuck Country Club course in Birmingham, Alabama.

Baldwin and his UK

teammates will be defending their conference crowns, which were won at this same site one year ago. Paul won a share of the individual title with a time of 18 minutes and 26 seconds.

"Naturally, I hope to do better than last year," offered Baldwin, a 21-year-old senior. "For the team title, I feel that its going to be a fight among Tennessee, Alabama, and us."

So far this year, the Flint, Michigan native has led the Wildcats on an undefeated dual meet record. At the Tennessee Invitational, Baldwin set a new course record of 30:17, as the Cats finished fourth in the 15-team meet. He ran sixth in the Calloway Gardens Invitational, where UK finished fourth out of 37 teams.

Two bad races

"Baldwin's had only two bad races since he's been here and one of them was at Calloway Gardens this year," said coach Press Whelan of his star runner. "We've always been strong at our No. 1 position and Baldwin is out to repeat last year's win."

Baldwin, an accounting major, started his cross-country career as a junior at Bendle High in Flint, which is located about 60 miles north of Detroit.

"It was a small school with only 104 kids in my graduating class. Besides cross-country, I found time to play a little intramural basketball," commented Baldwin.

"My most satisfying win this year was the Tennessee Invitational," he added. "Overall, the most satisfying victory would have to be at last year's conference meet."

UK mistakes are costly

By MIKE HERRICK
Kernel Staff Writer

Errors, bad breaks, or mistakes—they all point to a loss. And UK's performance Saturday is evidence supporting the fact.

Playing a team with a 2-7 record that hadn't won a SEC game since last year, the Cats gave away their last road game of the season, 35-24, to Florida.

UK started well. After a strong Gator threat that ended in a missed field goal, Bernie Scruggs marched UK down the field.

Then it happened, the first of a series of mistakes that doomed Kentucky to defeat.

With third down and two to go on the Gators' 16, Scruggs fumbled in the backfield and Florida quickly recovered.

But, five plays later, Kentucky's Jeff Woodcock picked off a John Reaves pass and returned it to the Florida 46.

The Cats moved the ball quickly to the 30, but it happened again. A mix-up play caused a second Scruggs fumble and UK lost another chance to score.

After a blocked Tom Kirk field-goal attempt, Kentucky's defense held again and got the ball back. But, alas, guess what?

No, not a fumble. This time Scruggs, throwing to Jim Reed, suffered an interception after the ball bounced out of Reed's grasp.

Florida's Dave Poff returned to interception to the UK 37 and 4 plays later, Lenny Lucas drove in for the score.

With only 1:37 left in the half, Kentucky began a drive that ended at the Florida 5, where Kirk kicked a last-second field goal, making the score 7-3 at the half.

"If we hadn't had the errors we had in the first half..." said coach John Ray, after the game.

"I felt at half time we should have been leading 21-7," stated Ray.

The beginning of the second half marked one of UK's best drives of the season.

Kittens close with 9-7 win

The third try proved to be the charm for the UK freshmen as Doug Sexton's 37-yard field goal gave the Kittens a 9-7 win over Bowling Green and a 4-1 final record.

After missing on two earlier attempts, Sexton connected with 10:11 left in the game.

The Kittens scored their touchdown in the third quarter on short run by Junior Coleman. The tally was set up by Ken Fuller's recovered fumble.

Each team lost three fumbles in the loosely-played game and UK intercepted five passes, including one by Tom Ranieri that set up Sexton's field goal. UK failed to complete a pass.

Starting from their own 9, the Cats 91 yards in 14 plays, while picking up 6 first downs on the way. With good running by Lee Clymer, Mark Campbell and Scruggs, UK finally got its first touchdown on an 11-yard burst by Clymer.

But, then, the defense fell apart. Florida struck for two touchdowns and a 21-10 lead.

UK nearly came back. Getting within the Florida 20 on a fourth and 13 play, Scruggs threw to Jack Alvarez, but it was broken up by the Gator defense.

Then Florida broke open the game. With the ball on their own 44, Reaves caught the Kentucky pass defense sleeping. He found Carlos Alvarez wide open downfield and hit him with a 56-yard scoring pass, making it 28-10.

Fanuzzi plays well

Sub quarterback Mike Fanuzzi played promisingly in relief. The sophomore engineered a pair of scoring drives in the fourth quarter, running once and passing once to Elmore Stephens for the touchdowns.

UK's offensive total was, by far, its best of the season. The Cats amassed 514 yards, but the Gators, whose offense had been dormant all season, nearly equalled that amount with 443 yards themselves.

But it was that old bugaboo—mistakes—that killed the Cats.
