

The World Whirls On

By JIM WOOLDRIDGE

Cracking over the wires last week came the news that Hitler was massing several large motorized divisions of his army on the borders of Belgium and the Netherlands, that his soldiers had kidnaped several prominent citizens in the frontier region, and minor attacks had already taken place. King Leopold, the Belgian and Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands immediately called a meeting to determine joint defense measures in case of invasion. They decided to order complete mobilization of their armed forces and to evacuate civilians from the danger zones. As a final preparation, the two empires recently opened the famous dikes of the low countries and flooded the terrain through which the Nazi legions would have to march.

Europeans wondered whether Hitler was planning to make a tank movement along the route which the Germans followed in 1914. The timely reminder that the Prussian Juggernaut crashed through Belgium, despite the valiant but futile resistance of the soldier King Albert, how they rolled over the northern part of France with perfect calculated precision, how they came within 40 miles of Paris before the Allied forces could intercept them, the Kaiser would have won his victory but for a blunder by one of his generals.

In 1914, this flank attack was very successful to the Germans, but in 1939 wouldn't be quite the same situation. In the first place, the border of France which touches Belgium is not the same demilitarized plain that existed in the early days of World War I. It is fortified almost as heavily as the Maginot line and has been recently reinforced by entire British expeditionary army, whose motorized divisions are expected to dash forth and engage the Nazi advance forces before they can get started. In the second place, the weather isn't as favorable as it was during that hot August of 1914. The ground has frozen and snow is falling—attempt a sustained offensive would be out of the question.

What Hitler plans, they say, is not an extended campaign against the French right wing by way of the two little neutral states, but a thrust into the low countries themselves. The experts say that he is planning another lightning move: the type practiced against Poland in order to acquire air bases closer to England and begin his long-planned mass air attacks on London and Paris. They agree that the Nazi air force is the most powerful weapon that Hitler has kept in its check because he wanted his prestige to be taken up by the forces of France and England and the future war ended, as soon as possible, by a thrust toward Belgium and the Netherlands. They are also concerned that a large number of German troops, although their country hasn't been invaded for over 200 years because of its impenetrable forests, are now watching armies to be caught napping. They, too, have called for strategic roads into Germany bristling with batteries and machine guns, the purest form of democratic government in the world is determined to resist any Nazi move toward the Alps.

LAST MINUTE FLASHES:
HELFINSKI, Finland Foreign Minister Eljas Erko announced that Finland has reached the limit of her concessions to the Russians and will call the Finnish negotiators home from Moscow within a day or two, unless they immediately break the deadlock. He added that the Finns refused to be intimidated by the Russian ultimatum, an "irreconcilable attitude."

ROME, Italy—Pope Pius XI stated in his official press statement, addressed to a Catholic concave in Washington that the Christians throughout the world would have to solidify their faith or they would be overcome by the "holocaust philosophy of the evil forces now rampant in the world."

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A rumor continued to gather strength of a fiscal crisis that the German charge d'affaires had received full instructions to approach President Roosevelt on the possibility of a peace appeal to the Allies on behalf of Hitler.

KENNETH LEGRANDE

Class of '43

Although as a freshman he had been on the campus only a short time, Kenneth LeGrande had many friends and had become a citizen of the University student body in the true sense.

His passing not only leaves a vacuum in the hearts of his family, friends, and fraternity brothers but also the sympathy of the University personnel and student body.—L. C.

In The Fall, An Old Man's Fancy . . .

This morning the Colonel is feeling mighty chipper. Autumn, handsome of Kentucky's quarter of seasons, is here — and he's glad of it.

Autumn, the Colonel reflects, is a wonderful time of year. It is then that the dusk comes early, and the cat-footed fog sneaks into hollows and creek-beds. Gardening gives way to tweed, and the good, solid sound of cleared feet meeting cowhide stands out against backgrounds of band music.

Filling stations begin to smell of anti-freeze, and squirrels suddenly become willing to race for the walnut that just fell from von tree. Matinal debates go on inside drowsy nozzles over whether the rain-coat or the top-coat shall be the order of the day.

People suddenly become overwhelmed with nostalgic thoughts of places they have never been.

Sugar-maples and dogwoods blush and then begin to stage their annual Gypsy Rose Lee acts. And chapped lips pour out whistled tunes into air that is crisp as fresh potato-chips.

Autumn, after a series of false starts, is finally here. — And the Colonel, deeply aware of it all, is happy. — J. M. C.

The National Guard Takes "Only A Few"

Listen to James F. Green, of the Intercollegiate Disarmament Council, only student representative at the Geneva Conference in 1932.

"After contemplating the events preceding the catastrophe of 1914, we (the students) remain unconvinced as to the wisdom of our predecessors. Fourteen years after the Armistice was signed, the glamor and heroism of that period fails to impress us, even when inscribed in gilt on stone memorials. The sword has lost its brilliance, the helmet and shiny buttons are tarnished. . . . We respect the war dead, but we question the judgment of those responsible for their death . . ."

That is our voice, yet between 1,200 and 1,400 Kentucky National Guardsmen are at Camp Knox for a week's additional field training under the limited national emergency program proclaimed by President Roosevelt. Comparatively few are forced to lose a week's schooling at the University of Kentucky. Only a few, but these few must go. Similar to young men in England, Germany now . . .

Something inside shivers. These large-scale military activities. What kind of psychological effect must these operations evoke in the minds of the gullible public, usually prone to believe, anyway, that war is inevitable. It's for "preparadness," they say. And in that name they snatch college and high school students from studies in order to train them to carry a gun.

Has the War Department sighted an invading army off-shore? Or has someone again made up our minds to go over and kill to "save democracy," "stop Hitlerism," or check the "advance of imperialism"? Are the appeals of youth all over the country coming to naught? Listen once more to James F. Green.

"Other speakers have made at stake; we have even more, for we are literally fighting for our lives. It is my generation which will be called upon to surrender all they consider worth while in order to become targets for machine gun bullets and victims of the latest poisonous gases. It is young men and women of my age who will be commanded to commit suicide. It is my generation which will be requested to destroy the best of human culture, perhaps civilization itself, for causes which future historians will discover to be erroneous, or not utterly stupid or actually vicious. We have thus lost interest in being prepared for cannon fodder."

In deepest seriousness, we echo, "We have lost all interest in being prepared for cannon fodder."

But she might, at least, have used the self-same bun as her horrible example, instead of slapping the present-day fraternities and societies who have certainly swept their porches clean of this type of social prejudice ago.

SCRAP IRONY

By HARRY WILLIAMS

Surely the radio is omniscient, for nothing escapes its argus-eyed vigilance. From it we learn all manner of things; good and evil, sordid or romantic. If in Simpson county, the oldest male dies, we know about it; when a man poisons his wife in Dubuque, we are informed. Facts pour from the loudspeaker and heap up about our knees until we are fat bogged down.

Last week, for instance, the British Ministry of Information announced, rather apologetically, that Neville Chamberlain has the gonorrhea. Now what, in hell, do you suppose the Prime Minister is doing with the gonorrhea? George Eliot says in Silas Marner (page 33) that: "The rich ate and drank freely, and accepted gout and apoplexy as things that ran mysteriously in respectable families," but now we are enlightened. Now we know that gout is caused by eating and drinking freely. No medicinal speculation these days. If Chamberlain has the gonorrhea, he's been doing himself. Too much Yorkshire pudding probably, or an overdose of Vat 69. This makes the English food rationing system look pretty inadequate. What sort of a rationing system is it that allows people to glut themselves until they get the gonorrhea? Evidently someone is not thinking things through here. Where, in this piratical state of affairs, are we to find the time-honored British efficiency that defeated Napoleon, where the spirit of Trafalgar?

It has occurred to me that the European war is serving as a sort of prism for American public opinion. A general unanimity of ideas exists about Europe when that continent is at peace, but let them get involved in a war and that unanimity is divided into foreign policies as varied in color and density as the colors of the spectrum. This is probably good for us. It shows us all aspects of the question, plows under our prejudices.

Somewhat, I have always been suspicious of unanimity on any question. When people who normally disagree about religion, about philosophy, and about domestic politics express the same opinions about foreign affairs, I begin to doubt their sincerity. When all the wheat in a field is bent toward the north, it doesn't necessarily connote an individual predisposition; on the part of each wheat-stalk in that direction it merely means that the wind is in the south.

University professors, though, should avoid telling their classes what they think of the European war, and what they think the United States should do. Students respect their opinions and often adjust their own analyses of the situation accordingly. It is to be remembered that some professors are appallingly naive when it comes to international affairs.

Teaching in a University is in normal times a dangerous enough profession. Advising people what to do with their lives is always, I imagine, a tedious affair, and with all the world at war the responsibility of a University professor is too great for him to attempt the slightest indoctrination of his ideas or ideals. This is no time for the inculcation of any principle or of any plan of action, however valid and realistic it may appear. No flag-waving is necessary either, no nationalistic incantations required.

We are aware that we live in a democracy, if a limited one, and we know too, that democracy is no more at stake in this war than it was in the last. Our generation is not entirely oblivious to war aims and ostensible war aims. We are the ones who will have to fight and die — if anything is to be done, we are the ones to do it.

Spans the embarrassment of yawning at your opinions, gentlemen, this is not a kindergarten; it is a university; it is a spirit; it is a collection of books, etc. Just give us the facts, we'll draw the conclusions.

Loyalty To Allied Side Is Negligible In Survey

By JOE BELDEN, Editor Student Opinion Surveys of America

Student, Texas—As the nation debates the way to stay out of a European war, what is American college youth thinking and saying about the situation? Scores of personal interviews have completed the first of this year's polls for the Student Opinion Surveys of America on campuses from Coast to coast — and find:

1. Students are opposed to changing the neutrality laws, making up a definition they believe this would involve the United States.

2. Even if the Allies were in danger of losing to Germany, the United States should not send troops to help them.

3. College men — almost 6 out of every 10 — say they would not volunteer in England and France were called and this country went to their aid.

Ballots have been gathered for the Surveys from typical students of the nation over, making up a definite cross-section on which are based these weekly studies of college thought. Since the methods used are exactly those of famous public opinion polls that have shown remarkable accuracy, the Surveys represent the sentiments of all the one and a half million American college students.

While Congressional armistice got underway in Washington, interviews were stopped, making up a definite cross-section on which are based these weekly studies of college thought. Since the methods used are exactly those of famous public opinion polls that have shown remarkable accuracy, the Surveys represent the sentiments of all the one and a half million American college students.

YES, answered — 42 percent. NO, answered — 58 percent.

Undergraduates against the amendment, believe danger of getting this country into war will be increased and the conflict will be prolonged. Those for the move sympathize with the Allies or want to see the end of Hitlerism. A junior at Glenville West Virginia State Teachers College spoke for a large group when he said, "I favor every because it is the nearest we can get to neutrality."

To the question, "If England and France were in danger of defeat, should the United States send troops to help them?" only 38 percent replied "yes."

Following that query, men students, the majority of whom are of conscription age, were asked: "If England and France were in danger of defeat and the United States declared war on their enemies, would you volunteer?" The results:

Would volunteer — 42 percent. Would not volunteer 58 percent.

Significantly, events in recent months, climaxed by actual combat in Europe, have apparently induced a good many, for in February, 1939, the Surveys found that only 2 out of every 10 would volunteer if this country went to war for other reasons than the defense of the country. These opinions, of course, are a prediction of what would happen if this nation did declare war. Shifts in sentiment may already be seen since world war has become more of a possibility. No one can tell what war fever can do.

KITTENS ROLL TO SECOND WIN, DOWN CINCINNATI FROSH, 27-0

Pushing across touchdowns in the first, second and fourth quarters, the Kentucky freshmen rolled to their second grid win of the season with an easy 27-0 decision over the University of Cincinnati frosh Saturday afternoon on Stoll field.
Kentucky scored in the opening minute of play when George Edwards, Kitten end, recovered the opening kick-off in the Cincinnati 24. With Bob Herbert and Bill Kitchner leading the assault, the Kittens registered six plays later with Herbert driving 3 yards over center and Phil Cutchin's place kick for extra point was perfect.

With the line opening gaping holes, the Kittens moved 37 yards in scoring touchdowns two, late in the second period. This attack was featured by Kitchner's running and was concluded when Herbert rumbled his way over center for one yard and a marker. Cutchin added his second extra point was a place kick.
Charles Sither, Kitten end, set the stage for the third marker when he intercepted a pass on the Cincinnati 29. Kinner drove straight over center, reversed his field and outran the secondary for the six points. The kick by Cutchin was no good.

The Kittens' final touchdown came late in the game when Grether, Cincinnati back, was sneered by the entire Blue and White line as he tried to punt on fourth down from his own 21. Jack Farmer ripped over tackle for 13 yards and then took a pass from Cutchin for the marker. Cutchin's kick again was good.
Cincinnati threatened to score but once when Don Davis, who tried out last year at Kentucky, completed a pass to the 13 yard line. The ball was moved to the 10 yard line by the Kittens' big line effort and took the ball. Kentucky punted up 14 first downs to Cincinnati's 9.

Hot Plate Constructed
Students and faculty members of the College of Engineering have recently designed and constructed a machine known as a "hot plate" to determine the rate of heat transfer through building materials.
The machine was completed under the supervision of J. W. May, associate professor of heating and ventilating engineering.
