Roselle's leadership qualities marked by diplomacy

By BRAD COOPER
Editor-in-Chief

No matter where UK President David P. Roselle travels, whether it is Hong Kong, Tokyo, Rome or Virginia, he is always as close as his computer.

Take a few minutes to type a message on a computer and he can return it within the hour.

For Roselle, 47, the former provost at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, the U.S. Postal Service has become obsolete. He receives most of his mail by computer.

Electronic mail is only part of a computer revolution that Roselle says could create opportunities for UK and higher education.

"(Computers) are an extremely educational issue," Roselle said in a recent interview at the King Alumni House.

"I believe that the learning process will be directly affected by the availability of computers," he said. "I think the way society will go is that larger numbers will own computers."

"I think we'll reach a day when computers will be so prevalent in college education that it will be necessary to get computers in the dorm rooms of the students."

That day has almost arrived at Virginia Tech, where Roselle is given credit for computer innovations on campus.

During his tenure as provost, Tech acquired a $9 million supercomputer from International Business Machines Corp. and a $16 million campus communications system to handle all telephone, video and computer data transmissions.

Since 1984, Virginia Tech's engineering and business freshmen have been required to buy personal computers in order to qualify for financial aid.

Persuading students to buy a personal computer was not a burdensome issue at Virginia Tech and should not be for UK either if the University chooses to do something similar in the future, Roselle said.

SGA director seeking to oust cabinet official

By KAREN PHILLIPS
Managing Editor

Tai Doram, the UK Student Government Association executive director for Community Affairs, is trying to get Secretary of Education William Bennett to resign.

"He has continued to make cuts on higher education," Doram said. "He thinks no money should be given to students because they spend it on nice cars and expensive universities, — that they're wasting the government's money."

Doram began his project as a representative of the UKSGA, but beginning in the fall will use his position as Southern Regional Chairperson of the American Association of University Students as his affiliation.

So Doram went to Washington, D.C. to address several committees, senators and congressmen to ask for Bennett's resignation.

"I told them that we have no confidence in his ability as an adviser for higher education," Doram said. "We're trying to start a chain reaction."

Doram also said he has received letters of support from other officials and several universities including Vanderbilt and Rochester Universities. In fact, he said he hasn't received any letters of non-support.

Specifically, Doram said that Senators Wendell Ford and Mitch McConnell and Congressmen William Natcher and Chris Perkins had been "bending over backwards to help us."

Doram said he also contacted Congressman Larry Hopkins who "was not as helpful."

However, press secretaries for Ford and McConnell said they were not "bending over backwards to help." Natcher and Perkins could not be reached for comment.

While John Chambers, Ford's press secretary, would not comment specifically on Doram or his project said that Ford does "commend the student body for being active in things they believe in."

Chambers also acknowledged that Doram had met in Washington with some of Ford's representatives.

McConnell's press secretary, M.J. Singland, said that the senator had received a letter from Doram explaining his cause and they had acknowledged receiving it, but no other action had been taken by either party.

Pam Pearlman, press secretary for Hopkins, said that they had received a letter from Doram and asked for more information.

Doram, she said, never sent the information and canceled his Washington meeting with Hopkins shortly before it was scheduled.

While Doram did say he doesn't expect his actions to cause Bennett to resign, he does think it will affect support of the Reagan administration.

"This is going to show how the Reagan administration cares for its students," he said. "Maybe Bennett won't resign, but maybe there will be more money set aside for students."

Radio station allocated room in Student Center

By WESLEY MILLER
Arts Editor

The Student Activities Board has allocated room in the Old Student Center to Radio Free Lexington for studio space.

RFL has also reached its financial goal of $7,500, making it possible for UK and the city of Lexington to match that amount of money over the next three years.

On the recommendation of SAB President Lynne Hunt and Frank Harris, director of the Student Center, Room 106D, a large storage area used by UK Kopy Kat, will be renovated to fit RFL's studio and office space needs.

"We're really excited about the space they've given to us," said Mark Beatty, RFL's program director. "It has more room for our needs than anywhere else in the Student Center."

The storage area, which RFL will share with Kopy Kat, contains 1,061 square feet, of which about 750 will be used for the construction of two studios and office space for production, information and training departments.

RFL's current offices in the basement of Miller Hall will continue to be used for the station's general manager and directors of public relations, news and music.

Adapting Room 106D for RFL use would require construction of an outside door in the west wall of the Old Student Center, to allow 24-hour access.

Room 106D was not the first choice of either SAB or RFL.

"The possibility of using the storage space had not occurred to us in our first meetings," said John Herbst, director of student activities. "Upon further consideration, the space seemed to satisfy the needs of the radio station."

"Its benefits are numerous," Herbst said. "The room was not in use by any group, plus it is next door to the student organization offices."

The space also has the advantage of its own heating and cooling units, making it possible to regulate the temperature of that area without having to heat or cool the entire building, Herbst said.

In addition to having a home for its studios, RFL is now a step closer

Tax reforms allow students to earn more money

By ANTHONY CLARK
Contributing Writer

The tax reforms created by the Reagan administration and passed by Congress in 1986 will allow working students to earn more money without paying federal income taxes.

However, James Allgood, of the regional office of the Internal Revenue Service in Louisville, said students whose parents claim them as dependents on their federal tax returns will not be allowed to claim the personal deduction on their own returns.

Allgood said that in 1986 single students who earned $3,560 or less could have claimed exemption from federal income taxes by taking the standard deduction of $1,080.

In 1986 their parents could also have claimed them as dependents and deducted $1,080 from their taxable income.

This year, Allgood said, the minimum amount of earnings under which students may be able to claim exemption has been raised to $4,440. An increase in the standard deduction to $2,540, and the personal deduction to $1,900, is responsible for the higher exemption figure.

"But if their parents claim them as dependents on their tax returns," he said, "students will not be allowed to take that personal deduction of $1,900 from their own earnings."

Allgood said, "This is the most significant change in the new tax code affecting students."

He also said the new tax code was "more complex."

Students should "take the time to sit down and calculate exactly what their earnings from work, as well as unearned income like interest and dividends, will amount to in 1987," he said.

The next step to take in preparing your taxes for the 1987-88 fiscal year is to inform government agencies about how these changes will affect you by filing the W-4 and K-4 forms.

The W-4 and K-4 withholding forms tell an employer how much state and federal tax to withhold from paychecks.

The deadline for filing the W-4 and K-4 forms with the government is Oct. 1.

"If you don't file by then," Allgood said, "your employer will continue to withhold the same amount based on last year's tax table, which may lead to surprises next April."

"Students who don't file in time may end up bringing home less of their paycheck, and on the other hand they may come up owing taxes next April," he said.

David Stockham, director of student financial aid at UK, said according to a report in March, of the nearly 17,000 UK students who applied for financial aid for the 1986-87 school year, approximately 14,000 were classified as dependent students, reporting that they had been claimed as dependents on their parents' income tax returns.

Stockham also said estimates indicate that of the 85 to 90 percent of those students reported some earned income.

Repairs on tower ahead of schedule

By CHERI COLLIS

The construction work on the 23-story Kirwan Tower is running ahead of schedule, with the completion date targeted for Aug. 16.

UK undertook the rebricking job on the building this summer due to safety concerns when exterior bricks began coming loose. Wooden canopies constructed in the fall of 1985 have guarded against injuries so far.

The repair of Kirwan Tower will cost $1.2 million and Blanding Tower an estimated $1 million. Work on the latter should begin next summer.

Removal of the bricks took a little less than two weeks instead of a planned three. Workers labored seven days a week to push ahead of schedule. Earlier work included building a gravel access road to the site and constructing a fence and scaffolding.

No tax dollars are involved in the repair. The money for the project comes from the renewal and replacement fund — fees students pay for living in campus housing.

"We really didn't have a set budget planned when we began the project... but it is more than we estimated as we began taking the bricks off," said Jack Blanton, vice chancellor for administration.

Brick replacement is anticipated to take seven weeks and be completed by Aug. 1. Painting and waterproofing the renovated exterior will not be completed until Aug. 16.

The scaffold and fencing will be taken down by Aug. 19.

Lichtefeld/Massaro Inc. of Louisville is the contractor who won the bid for the repair job.

"We haven't taken bids yet (for Blanding Tower)," said Penny Cox, UK housing director.

July 4th festivities kick off this afternoon

By ANTHONY CLARK
Contributing Writer

Lexington begins its celebration of the nation's birthday today with opening ceremonies in Triangle Park.

Mary Wathen, an administrative aid to Mayor Scotty Baesler, said the ceremony will begin at noon and will be the prelude to this weekend's lineup of holiday events.

There will be an apple pie baking contest beginning at 7 tonight in the Civic Center Shops, followed by a street dance on Main Street in front of Triangle Park from 8 until midnight.

Tomorrow afternoon the excitement takes to the skies over Lexington when hot-air balloons lift off at 5:30 for the hare and hound chase at Jacobsen Park on Richmond Road.

Helicopter rides, food vendors and musical entertainment from Pete Conley and the Dixie Band will be on tap before the race.

Then at 8 tomorrow night the Lexington Philharmonic will perform at Transylvania University, in a concert featuring patriotic music.

On Saturday the starting gun for the Bluegrass 10,000-meter foot race will sound at 8 a.m., and runners will start in front of the Downtown Motor Inn on Main Street.

Arts and crafts booths, food vendors and live entertainment will line the sidewalks beginning at 9 a.m. on Vine Street, and yet another race, the Waiters' Race, will begin at noon.

The annual Fourth of July parade will begin at 2:30 p.m. at the intersection of Main and Vine Streets.

The K-93 Fun Festival, featuring five country music bands on stage, begins at 7 p.m. and lasts until 10.

The bands scheduled to play are The Bandit Band, Doug Breeding and the Bunch, The Greg Austin Band, Joshua Cooley and Stampede.

This year's fireworks display explodes at 10 p.m. and, though they should be visible from a distance, the best place to be when the rockets are fired is at Masterson Station Park.

When the noise from the fireworks dies down at 10:30 Wathen said there will be music in store for celebrants until 11:30.

Roselle's leadership qualities marked by diplomacy

"I think what should happen is that we should try to build an attractive computing environment that students will want to buy them," he said.

That approach worked well at Virginia Tech, said William E. Lavery, Tech's president.

"Requiring students to buy computers) could have easily turned negative," Lavery said, "but with his approach it turns out that everybody is looking forward to buying their own personal computer."

Roselle began his administrative career as the dean of Tech's graduate school and research and graduate studies programs—a period he said was very exciting.

"We set out to put renewed emphasis on graduate research and to make a larger, better student body. Those were exciting days," he said.

In what some call Roselle's first success as an administrator, enrollment in Tech's graduate program increased during his first year as dean from 2,933 in the fall of 1979 to 3,119 in 1980.

Enrollment peaked during Roselle's years as dean at 3,233. In the fall of 1986, Virginia Tech enrolled 3,716 students in its graduate programs.

Roselle became Virginia Tech's provost or chief academic officer in July, 1983.

What makes Roselle a successful administrator, his colleagues at Virginia Tech say, is his experience as an administrator and as a faculty member.

After graduating from Pennsylvania's West Chester State College in 1961 with a bachelor's degree in physics, Roselle earned a doctorate in math from Duke University in 1965.

In 1965, Roselle met Louise Dowling while working as graduate student at Duke.

The two met about three years earlier while Roselle was working as a teaching assistant in a sophomore-level calculus class at Duke.

They did not begin to date until 1965 when she entered the graduate school at Duke and he took his first faculty position at the University of Maryland.

Roselle married Dowling of Manhasset, N.Y., on June 19, 1967.

The Roselles have two children, neither of whom will live with them in Maxwell Place in the fall.

Arthur, 16, will be a senior at Woodberry Forest School and Cynthia, 15, who will be sophomore, attends the Madeira School. Both private schools are in Virginia.

Roselle left Maryland in 1968 for a better research program at Louisiana State University.

Virginia Tech offered Roselle a position in 1968, but he declined, seeking a better research program.

However, he kept in touch with administrators at Tech and finally took an assistant professorship there in 1974.

As a student, faculty member or administrator, Roselle says he has enjoyed every bit of higher education.

"I've just enjoyed higher education," Roselle said. "College was fun. Graduate school was even more fun. It was hard, but it was enjoyable. I've enjoyed my time as an administrator."

It was not until Roselle joined the ranks of the faculty that he began to appreciate the pursuit of academic excellence.

"As a faculty member I've enjoyed pursuing scholarship, as a student I was just trying to pass the courses," he said.

Roselle's experiences as an administrator, faculty member and student give him keen insight into what a university is about, said John Wilson, his predecessor as Virginia Tech's provost, now president of Washington and Lee University.

"He knows what a university is, what it is for, why it is, and where it comes from," Wilson said.

"He understands the importance of academic tenure and academic freedom," he said. "He doesn't have to be persuaded about the importance of faculty. He doesn't take the faculty for granted."

Jarol Manheim, president of Tech's faculty senate, agrees with Wilson's assessment.

"He's got a good set of administrative skills in that he understands the nature of the university," Manheim said. "He can talk to faculty and he can talk to administrators."

Others at Virginia Tech and UK describe Roselle as quiet, soft-spoken, thoughtful, intense, confident and tough. He's not afraid to deal with turmoil or make tough decisions, Wilson said.

One difficult decision came when Virginia Tech revised its 100-year-old honor code.

Roselle's willingness to listen to concerns and handle the situation more as a "diplomat" than as a "dictatorial sort" made it easier to make the system less stringent on offenders, Manheim said.

Roselle handled the system's revision by applying modern society's standards—"that if one makes a mistake it doesn't have to be the end of the world," Lavery said.

Another dilemma Roselle was instrumental in resolving as provost was a 15-year debate over Tech's quarter system. Beginning in 1988, Virginia Tech will move to a semester system.

"He's quiet and tough. Don't be deceived," Wilson said. "He can make good, tough, independent, administrative decisions without dying inside."

Even if there is controversy surrounding the decisions Roselle makes at UK, Manheim said, people will still respect his choices.

"People will learn to respect his judgment," Manheim said. "He's not a glad-hand politician type. He's a serious person that deals at a level of thoughtfulness and ideas."

While Roselle tends to shy away from describing himself, he is not bashful when it comes to discussing higher education, UK in particular.

Before Roselle is ready to discuss where he wants to take the University, however, he wants to be sure he knows what Kentuckians want.

"I have a fair number of ideas of what I would like the University of Kentucky to try to accomplish," he said. "What I want to be sure is that my ideas mesh with the people whose opinions are much more important than mine."

This willingness to seek other viewpoints is what makes Roselle a successful administrator, Manheim said.

"He's very easy to work with," he said. "He's a quick study. He's somebody who looks for better ideas and tries to implement them."

One group Roselle will likely seek ideas from is the UK faculty.

In meeting with faculty members on his tours of UK's Lexington campus, community college system and the Medical Center, Roselle said he found that faculty want to be more involved with administrative decision making—a philosophy he agrees with.

When Roselle begins formalizing his agenda, it will be the faculty's wishes, he said, that will take priority.

"I think it's the faculty's responsibility to set the agenda for the University and to define the academic courses, the research programs, things like that. Their responsibilities lie in those areas," he said.

Roselle said he believes a university's faculty is of paramount importance. Without a successful faculty, he said, UK could flounder.

That is why Roselle places emphasis on recruiting quality faculty members.

"Faculty recruitment—is as all personnel recruitment—is the most important (goal), it really is," he said. "It is just awfully important who you hire. Whatever your job is, it's awfully important who you have to serve on the faculty."

Facing $4.5 million in cuts from this year's operating budget, with an additional $2.7 million frozen until October, Roselle may find it difficult attracting quality professors to UK.

The projected average salary for faculty at UK this year is $38,500—$3,700 behind the projected average salary at UK's benchmark institutions. Average faculty pay at Virginia Tech is $41,000.

"One is never pleased by any kind of budgetary problem," he said. "One, especially someone who is aggressive as I am, wants to get out and accomplish things and do things and make programs better."

"One can't be happy about this situation, one just can't be." During fiscal 1988, which began July 1, the University will not increase money for operating expenses. No money will be allocated for program improvement.

Despite the state's gloomy economic forecast in the face of a $130 million shortfall for fiscal 1988, Roselle is still ready to move forward in his first year as president.

Roselle says he is not sure about the need for a special session to remedy the state's budget problems, but he is certain about one thing.

UK should earn its own support. "I think in the final analysis that you've got to gain legislative support for the University on the basis of people thinking that the University is doing a good job," Roselle said.

Apparently he was able to convince both federal and state governments as well as corporate sponsors that Tech was a quality educational institution.

Last year Virginia Tech ranked 49th nationally in research funding from all sources and seventh nationally in money obtained solely from industrial firms.

Roselle does not take credit for much of Virginia Tech's fund raising in the private sector, saying "it was the times."

But the former provost should not be discounted in fund raising at Tech, Lavery said.

Roselle did not work much with Virginia's legislature, but he still did his homework and knew how to make contacts for research money, Lavery said.

Roselle's contact with U.S. Rep. Frederick Boucher, D-Virginia, helped win Virginia Tech a $300,000 grant for its college of medicine, he said.

When it comes to raising money in Kentucky, Roselle said he prefers being the University's ambassador, not a politician.

"I don't think playing politics is a correct role for the head of a state agency, which is what this job is," Roselle said.

"I think my obligation is to present as straightforward and as clear-cut a way as possible what the program and the policies and the needs of the University of Kentucky are."

For UK to be successful with the legislature, Roselle said he will have to promote the faculty's accomplishments—both in research and educating students.

"The more the faculty accomplish, the better placement the students get. The more students that graduate from the University of Kentucky and open businesses and do well improving the economic environment of the commonwealth... make it possible for people to want to help the University."

In order to ensure academic excellence for UK, Roselle said he believes faculty should be thoroughly evaluated and admissions standards for undergraduates toughened.

At Virginia Tech, professors are evaluated by alumni, students and other professors, Roselle said.

These evaluations are a part of tenure and salary decisions. "Generally, faculty have responsibilities in the areas of teaching, service and scholarship, and I think that faculty should be evaluated for promotion, tenure and salary increases," he said.

Faculty, however, are not the only ones who should be held accountable for academic excellence, he said.

To achieve excellence not only at UK but at high schools around the state, Roselle said Kentucky's flagship university must send out the signal that education must be taken seriously.

The way to make that signal is by increasing admissions standards.

"One wants to have the message sent out across Kentucky that the educational attainment appropriate for entry in a selective admissions program," he said, "is an important issue, because once you do that you cause the whole secondary program to be taken more seriously."

Higher admissions standards, Roselle said, also free professors for research instead of tying them up teaching remedial courses.

Roselle's pursuit of academic excellence will not take a back seat to college athletics during his tenure at UK.

"Athletics are an extracurricular activity and the curricular activities should be the priority of the institution."

Roselle, who enjoys running and golfing, said intercollegiate athletics are beneficial for the University, as long as they are played by the rules.

"It's a good thing to play, it creates interest in the school," he said. "But it's only good if it is done fairly and enhances, not detracts from, the reputation of the University."

When the rules are broken, he said, action must be taken.

"My line is drawn anytime the

Singletary begins move into new life and office

By LYN CONGLETON
Senior Staff Writer

Former UK President Otis A. Singletary not only added emeritus to his title yesterday but he also stepped into a new office.

Singletary will be working in a special office designed for him behind the Peal Gallery in the north wing of M. I. King Library, said Jack Blanton, vice chancellor for administration.

Cost for renovation of the office, which formerly was a one-room office for three library employees, was more than $20,000, said Blanton. The Physical Plant Division spent about 45 days renovating, he said.

Singletary, now a history professor, will be taking a six month leave of absence before beginning a book "about what's happened in higher education in the last quarter of a century," Singletary said. UK will be a "sort of test tube" for higher education in the book, he said.

Singletary is the first incumbent professor of the Ashland Professorship of the Humanities, an Ashland Oil endowed position.

Singletary also will be working on the development area of raising funds from private contributors.

He has not decided whether he will make it back to the classroom.

"I'm going to keep the future open on teaching," he said.

Singletary said that he will keep a low profile in Lexington for awhile because he thinks it's "good to let the new man settle in."

Renovation for the office included building over a door which led to the rare book collection, a new side door leading outside, dividing the one large room into two rooms and fixing the door to the Peal Gallery so that it opens only from the Peal Gallery side, said Paul Willis, director of libraries.

Space for Singletary's office was available due to a new type of shelving, Willis said. Compact shelving has been purchased for the rare books collection room, said Willis.

"This (rare books collection room) is a place to maximize our space," said Willis. The compact shelving allows the shelves to move on tracks so they can be pushed together, leaving only one aisle.

"In the same square footing you get . . . more space," Willis said. This shelving made enough room for three private offices for the employees who shared the space behind Peal Gallery, Willis said.

One advantage Singletary will have with his office location, Willis

Willis said he thought the library was also the ideal location for Singletary's work with fund raising because "we serve the whole community."

"I don't see that (the office) as being inconsistent with what may happen to this building," Willis said.

Pharmacy appoints interim dean

The College of Pharmacy named William C. Lubawy, assistant dean for academic affairs, as its interim dean Tuesday afternoon.

Lubawy succeeds Joseph Swintosky, who has served as the college's dean for 20 years.

Although Swintosky's retirement as an administrator became effective yesterday, he will continue to work in the college as a faculty member and a researcher in the field of drug delivery systems.

The year-long search for Swintosky's successor has been narrowed to two candidates.

One finalist for the position is Joseph Fink, 40, an assistant dean in the College of Pharmacy, said Peter Bosomworth, chancellor for the Medical Center.

Last year Fink served on the committee searching for a new vice chancellor for student affairs.

The other finalist is Jordan Cohen, 44, is currently serving as a professor of pharmacy at the University of Southern California's College of Pharmacy.

He is chairman of the pharmaceuticals department in the college and has a yearlong fellowship with the American Council on Education.

UK President David P. Roselle has met with both candidates saying it is a "win-win" situation, according to spokeswoman for the Medical Center.

Bosomworth said it will only "be a matter of weeks, not months" before he expects to receive a recommendation from the search committee.

Associate director acquired for school

The Patterson School of Diplomacy and International Commerce announced on Tuesday that Jeffrey D. Baker would become the school's new associate director.

Baker, a graduate of the U.S. Air Force Academy in 1964, comes to UK from Carroll College in Helena, Mont., where he worked as a professor of economics.

Baker has earned a variety of degrees including a bachelors in international affairs, a masters in business administration, which he received from Arizona State and a doctorate in economics. Baker received his doctorate from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

During Baker's 24-year career in the U.S. Air Force he was decorated with such awards as the Legion of Merit, the Distinguished Flying Cross and the Defense Meritorious Service Medal.

Baker's appointment ends a two-year, worldwide search that attracted 50 candidates, including senior diplomats, top military officers and leading executives from a variety of fields of international commerce.

UK graduate student wins $350 prize

Jerry Harvill, a doctoral communications student, won $350 for a paper he wrote explaining the ancient Greek concept of stewardship in relation to journalists.

Harvill picked up the prize in the Carol Burnett competition, which is sponsored by the University of Hawaii and the Association for Education in Journalism and Mass Communication.

Funds for the prize were given by actress Carol Burnett after her successful libel suit against the National Enquirer.

Harvill also won the award for best graduate paper on media ethics written during the 1986-87 academic year.

The paper was written for a mass communication and society seminar taught by former UK School of Journalism Director Edmund Lambeth.

Lambeth is now associate dean of the University of Missouri School of Journalism.

Zevon in peak form with 'Sentimental Hygiene'

By ERIK REECE
Senior Staff Critic

Sentimental Hygiene Warren Zevon/Virgin Records

When a reformed alcoholic isn't heard from for five years, people are going to talk.

Warren Zevon has heard all of the talk. And if somewhere in between The Envoy and now he has fallen off the wagon, so be it. The fact is he has climbed back on and made an album that can only be rivaled by Los Lobos' By the Light of the Moon as '87's best so far.

Zevon is the first member of Southern California's Holy Trinity of the Twisted Persona, whose other members are Randy Newman and Thomas Pynchon, to break the silence established by these icons. And while championing the lost causes of the downtrodden, Zevon tells us part of his own story.

Zevon has always been the boozing baritone with a flare for the darker side of the psyche, but he puts much of that aside to offer up some personal speculation and affirmation.

"Detox Mansion," where it is no secret Zevon has found occasional residence, casts him in the company of Liza Minelli and Liz Taylor, performing therapeutic chores around the yard. "It's tough to be somebody," goes the refrain. "It's hard to keep from falling apart/Here on Rehab Mountain we're gonna learn these things by heart."

"Trouble Waiting to Happen" and "Bad Karma" labor over a stumbling, hard luck existence that is explained as the result of taking "a wrong turn on the astral plane."

Take that, John Lennon. All of these songs have a kick that differs from previous albums. Gone are the whining guitars of Waddy Wachtel and the like that made the California Sound. Enter instead R.E.M. sans lead singer Michael Stipe.

Zevon has for the most part traded in his session men for Peter Buck, Mike Mills and Bill Berry and the result is a less stylized, bigger sound. But don't mistake this for R.E.M. with a new frontman. The milky film that floats around that sound simply doesn't surface here.

Judging from the credits, Zevon has more friends in the music business than Bob Geldof. Bob Dylan even shows up to do a harmonica solo and George Clinton arranges an odd racial protest, "Leave My Monkey Alone."

"Even a Dog Can Shake Hands," the funniest song present, was cowritten with Buck, Berry and Mills and throws some bruising guitar stands at record label reps and possibly at Zevon's old label, Elektra. "Abandon all hope, don't rock the boat, and we'll all make a few hundred grand/Everybody's trying to be a friend of mine/Even a dog can shake hands."

"Boom Boom Mancini" is a subtle indictment of a sport and its fans that allow for death and provide "hypocrite judgments after the fact." Zevon is at his songwriting best here.

Now if we could just hear from Newman and Pynchon.

Just the facts: Aykroyd at his best in 'Dragnet'

By WESLEY MILLER
Arts Editor

If anyone was destined to follow in the footsteps of the immortal Sgt. Joe Friday, that person was Dan Aykroyd.

Throughout his career in television and movies, Aykroyd's trademark has been his cool, straight-faced method of playing for laughs. From Elwood Blues to his "Saturday Night Live" portrayals of Rod Serling and Richard Nixon, Aykroyd has fine-tuned his comedic skills for the ultimate deadpan performance.

And this is it. Aykroyd is the heart and soul, the backbone, the spirit of "Dragnet." He is the source of about three-quarters of the film's jokes. In short, Joe Friday is a role Aykroyd was born to play.

Not once does Aykroyd slip into the ridiculous while spouting the corniest cop clichés imaginable. He plays totally straight the role of a detective who has devoted his life to his badge, and he is hilarious.

It's a shame the entire movie isn't as perfect.

The main problem lies in the film's plotting. The entire crime situation never really seems that pressing, serving only to tie together one funny scene to the next.

The story concerns the outbreak of violence by P.A.G.A.N. (People Against Goodness and Normalcy), an organization that retaliates against those who resist its ideas. In the first 15 minutes, P.A.G.A.N. sets fire to a warehouse that ships out soft-porn magazines, steals snakes and bats from the local zoo and snatches two lethal gases from a train.

The villain is Rev. Jonathon Whirley, played by Christopher Plummer ("The Sound of Music"), a popular TV evangelist who tries to use his influence to gain power and wealth.

Whirley collaborates with corrupt police chief Jane Kirkpatrick (Elizabeth Ashley), who stands to take over the mayor's seat if she and Whirley succeed in their nefarious plot.

Many things are left unexplained, like how P.A.G.A.N. evolved and how it managed to attract such a large following. The plot at times gets fairly convoluted, and without giving anything away, the conclusion is disappointingly anticlimactic.

However, Aykroyd is not the only thing worth recommending in the film. Tom Hanks is the perfect opposite to Aykroyd, playing his usual off-the-wall, streetwise character. As good as Aykroyd is, Hanks manages to hold his own in every scene. A lesser actor would have been forgotten five minutes after the film's ending.

"Dragnet" also features an enjoyable supporting performance by Dabney Coleman ("Tootsie"). Coleman is at his slickest as smut king

Dan Aykroyd and Tom Hanks star as Sgt. Joe Friday and his partner Pep Streebek in "Dragnet."

Jerry Caesar, one of Rev. Whirley's pawns.

Unfortunately, Harry Morgan, who reprises his TV role as Bill Gannon, doesn't have much to do in the film. He is cast as the slightly hard-edged, but basically soft-hearted police captain, but his role is hardly integral to the film's plot.

If it wasn't for Aykroyd, "Dragnet" would be a fairly ordinary film. Just try watching something else when Aykroyd is on screen. It can't be done.

"Dragnet" is playing at South and North Park cinemas. It is rated PG-13.

UK's Dykes adjusting to program

By RICK JENKINS
Contributing Writer

Packing up and moving to another town often brings many changes.

But new assistant basketball coach Jim Dykes has not only exchanged Boone, N.C. for Lexington, but the weak Southern Conference's Appalachian State Mountaineers for the Southeastern Conference's powerhouse UK Wildcats.

"Everything is on a bigger scale here," said Dykes. "The arena is bigger and the players are bigger." There's also the size of the UK program and the weight of the Big Blue tradition.

"There is definitely that Kentucky mystique," Dykes said, "and the program is huge. I could feel it when I walked into Rupp Arena, and I was even more impressed when I saw Memorial Coliseum. That's where it all started."

Dykes got his start as one of Eddie Sutton's players at Arkansas and a graduate assistant coach in 1984. "I'm here to teach the Sutton system. And I can teach it," Dykes said.

"I think playing and coaching at Arkansas really prepared me," he said. "Coach Sutton is the best college coach in the game, hands down. His philosophy is what wins ball games."

After his stint at Arkansas, Dykes spent a year as assistant coach at Sacramento State before taking the assistant coaching job at Appalachian State.

Sutton's offer came while Dykes was relaxing on vacation at Myrtle Beach, S.C. "He asked me to sleep on it (his offer)," Dykes said. "I said there's no need to, and I came up four days later."

"I've always liked Kentucky and I've always known that it had the best program in the country," he said.

JIM DYKES

After being in town a week, Dykes has managed to stay busy. He's met all the players, watched game films from last year and is playing a large part in Sutton's basketball camp. And now he's getting excited about Oct. 15, the first organized practice.

"I'm ready to get started. I've met personally with all the players, and I'm anxious to work with them," he said.

Dykes has had a small taste of Wildcat life. He's been in Rupp Arena for the first time, without the crowd, and he's seen Wildcat Lodge. But he said he knows that's just the beginning.

"The first time I experience those things, I probably won't be of much help (to Sutton), because I'll be standing around with my mouth hanging open, looking at the crowd," Dykes said.

"My main goal is to do the best job I can for Coach Sutton," he said. "If I can do that, then everything else will fall in place."

Dykes said he hopes to be a head basketball coach someday. But right now he's happy with his position.

"If someone told me I could coach anywhere I wanted to, from the Boston Celtics to the Los Angeles Lakers, I would choose here," he said. "I know I'm very fortunate to be here."

Irish, IU, top Cats' schedule

Staff reports

The UK 1987-88 basketball schedule, which was announced by Athletics Director Cliff Hagan Friday, features matchups against defending NCAA champion Indiana, runner-up Syracuse and rival Notre Dame.

Six of UK's 27 games will be televised, starting with CBS coverage of the UK-Louisville game at Rupp Arena Dec. 12.

"We have always felt our fans deserve a top-notch schedule against some of the best teams in the country," Hagan said. "Plus, we have always operated with the theory that playing a tough schedule helps a team get ready for NCAA play."

The "Big Four" doubleheader is scheduled for Dec. 5 at the Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis, although all details of the event have not been finalized. UK is expected to meet Indiana, while Notre Dame takes on Louisville. Both games are expected to be televised by ABC.

The annual UK Invitational Tournament will be played Dec. 18-19 with UK meeting Miami of Ohio, and UNC-Charlotte taking on Middle Tennessee Friday night. The consolation and championship game will be Saturday night.

Lady Kat coach confident of UK team's potential

By RICK BAKER
Contributing Writer

A plaque on the wall of Lady Kat coach Sharon Fanning's office reads, "There is no room for second place. There's only one place and that is first place."

For Fanning those words, spoken by football great Vince Lombardi, don't only mean first place in athletics.

"I know that the win-loss record is very significant in any program and we want that to be there too," Fanning said. "But I'm not a win-at-all-costs type coach. We're here to try and create an atmosphere where... (student-athletes) will grow and be the best people they can be."

And with one look at Fanning's track record, it's clear she knows what being the best is all about.

After graduating from the University of Tennessee-Chattanooga, Fanning spent a year as graduate assistant to Pat Head Summitt at Tennessee, one of the most successful women's programs in the country.

In 1976, she returned to UTC as its first full-time women's basketball coach. During 11 years at the Lady Moccasins' helm, Fanning's teams won five consecutive Southern Conference championships and posted only two losing seasons.

Fanning was named conference coach of the year in 1984 and 1985 and is a member of the Women's Basketball Coaches Association board of directors.

During last summer's U.S. Olympic Festival she coached the North team.

But of all the coaching jobs she has had, Fanning believes the one before her presents the biggest challenge.

"I think the Southeastern Conference presents the greatest challenge that anyone has across the country," she said. "It is definitely the strongest conference (in the nation)."

But Fanning does believe the SEC is a conference in which the Kats can succeed if given a little time.

"An SEC championship, a Final Four appearance, winning a national championship — all those things are great and they're definitely within our reach. But we do have to take it a step at a time. As far along as Kentucky basketball is, hopefully it won't take long to be where we want to be."

As for her debut season, Fanning is not setting her goals too high.

"We want to take what we have this year as a group and do the best with it we can," she said.

And Fanning is confident that no matter what the "best" is for her team next year, UK will support her every step of the way.

"I guess in jest some people have said to me, 'This is the honeymoon, wait until you lose your first game,'" she said. "I feel really good about the administration, about the support within the community and the boosters I've come in contact with."

Although Fanning is confident that her Lady Kats can one day win a championship, she realizes that pre-season promises are often taken with a grain of salt.

Another plaque on Fanning's office wall reads, "Winning must be made a reality by our actions and not merely left a dream by our thoughts."

Sharon Fanning said that.

Thompson, Miller make U.S. teams

Staff reports

UK's Kim Thompson, a 5-foot-9 outside hitter for Rising Sun, Ind., was one of 14 women volleyball players chosen to represent the United States at the World University Games at Zagreb, Yugoslavia July 9-17.

"This is a great honor not only for Kim, but a credit to our volleyball program," said UK coach Kathy DeBoer.

The 14-player squad was selected from more than 40 players who participated in the May 1-2 tryouts at the U.S. Olympic Training Center in San Diego.

"Almost all of these girls have played (together) at one time or another," U.S. coach Mike Heber said, "either coming up through the Junior Nationals or the universities."

Thompson played on the Olympic Festival East team in 1985 and won a gold medal at the 1986 festival. She was named to the All-Metro Conference team and received the Colonel Classic MVP during her two years at the University of Cincinnati.

Thompson redshirted at UK in 1986, after transferring from Cincinnati last winter.

UK's Derrick Miller has been selected to play for the South basketball team in the United States Olympic Festival in July.

UK coach Eddie Sutton will direct the South team in the July 18-22 tournament at Chapel Hill, N.C.

Miller, a 6-6 sophomore, averaged 5.2 points and 1.9 rebounds last season.

UK Athletic Director Cliff Hagan has also announced that signees LeRon Ellis and Eric Manuel are among 20 finalists trying for the U.S. team that will compete in the Junior World Championship tournament in Bormio, Italy, July 23-30. They will report to Lawrence, Kan., for tryouts July 5 under Kansas coach Larry Brown.

"We're extremely pleased that these three players... have been chosen to be part of our Olympic training program," Sutton said.

Tax hike may be only way to save state universities

It has not been more than a year since several top UK officials stood before the University Senate and told it about the University's achievements with the 1986 General Assembly.

UK had just won a $20 million bond issue for equipment along with $5 million for a supercomputer and $10 million for a robotics center.

Art Gallaher, chancellor for the Lexington campus, went so far as to say he had never felt better about UK's financial status during his 23-year tenure at the University.

It was only a temporary high. In December, the state notified the University it would have to cut $5.5 million from its budget because of an $89 million shortfall in state revenue.

The University was hit again in May as it was forced to set aside $4.5 million because of a $130 million shortage in state revenue. In addition, UK had to freeze $2.7 million of its budget until October.

Last week, outgoing President Otis A. Singletary said this year's budget was "painful" for him to present at his last Board of Trustees meeting.

Judging from the repercussions of the cuts, it is understandable why he was distressed.

Faculty salaries at UK lag even farther behind their counterparts at benchmark institutions than they did a year ago. There will not be an increase for operating expenses in the coming year nor will there be money for program improvements.

What a way for UK President David P. Roselle to take office. Clearly something must be done.

One possible action would be for Gov. Martha Layne Collins to call for a special session of the legislature to help rectify the problems caused by inaccurate forecasting.

Making a change in the tax code may be the only practical way of saving not only UK but other state universities from budget cuts expected during the remainder of fiscal 1988.

Higher education suffered a $12 million cut earlier this year. Higher education could be facing a $16 million cut in fiscal 1988.

One gubernatorial candidate said he thinks it's better to wait for the state to raise the needed revenue. Waiting for the needed money is not a position favored by many — including members of the Council on Higher Education.

The economic fallout resulting from the budget shortfalls could seriously damage universities across the state now. That is why next year is not the time to solve the problem.

Raising taxes is not the most palatable suggestion. But then it is more certain than gambling the future of Kentucky higher education away on a proposed lottery.

Toymakers compromise creativity

The scene — (A mother and her child are standing in a large Lexington toy store in the toy gun aisle. The child, an anxious boy appearing to be about 6 years old, has his heart set on a new piece of artillery, but he can't decide.)

The mother is offering her assistance.)
Boy — (Holding a plastic sawed-off shotgun bearing the title "City Vice".) See, mom, this is how you use it.

Mom — What about one of the others?
Boy — I can't make my decide of those. (Pointing at a battery-operated simulated laser pistol with lights and sound.) How much is this one? Is this real much?

Mom — (Trying to interest her child in a wooden play rifle much like the ones played with by children for the past 20 years, before high tech took over the children's market.) But this one has a strap and it's real sturdy.

Boy — (Still pushing for the laser, he points at the wooden gun.) It's too hard to use.

Mom — (Losing the battle.) How about something else?

Boy — (Turning to face the other side of the aisle, the boy spots a classic Tonka truck, a car carrier, and points at it.) What's this?

I wanted to grab the little brat and shake him. I wanted to scream "Dammit, that's a Tonka truck. This toy is a classic, it's a tradition. Forget the gun with the lights, it's mindless entertainment."
"Get an old-fashioned cap gun, with the paper rolls of caps, or get a GI Joe doll."

But I'm afraid it wouldn't have done any good.

Thomas J. SULLIVAN

For one thing neither a GI Joe doll nor paper cap rolls were anywhere in the store.

Oh there were these little 4-inch figures claiming the GI Joe name, but they weren't the 9-inch Army-clad hero I knew as a child.

You see, not only has Joe shrunk, but his turf has changed too. Joe is driving cars that change into planes and traveling in outer space.

As I walked the aisles of this store a funny feeling came over me. A feeling that some part of my past had died. Somewhere the era of Bugs Bunny, cowboys and Indians and tag died.

These traditions were pushed off the shelves by a high-tech bully known as the battery-operated toy and the Space Age theme.

And it hasn't been a change for the better. They've taken the play out of playing and replaced it with existing.

Kids don't have to be creative anymore. No longer do children playing Army need to create sounds with their mouths; the battery-powered guns do it for them.

No longer do they need to decide who was hit and how badly they were hurt in a game of war. Battery operated laser guns now blink and beep when their owner is struck by an opposing laser beam.

No longer can kids be kids.

As I looked over the guns on the shelves I was amazed. Uzis, lasers, sawed-off shotguns, etc. — all arrayed in colorful packages bearing endorsements by Sylvester Stallone's Rambo and Arnold Schwarzenegger's Commando.

These hardly seem like the kind of heroes kids should be growing up with. What happened to Superman, Dudley Do Right, Underdog, Mighty Mouse, Thor, Speed Racer, Ultraman, Ironman, Batman, Spiderman, Bullwinkle and the Lone Ranger?

Where have all the traditions gone? Hell, just look at Saturday morning cartoons today. What you'll see are the Smurfs, MASK, Transformers, Rambo and He-man and the Masters of the Universe. What kind of heroes are these?

They aren't comical, animated, children's entertainment. They're soap operas with love scenes and shoot-outs in space or in a blue jungle.

As I began to leave the store, annoyed and saddened, I noticed two kids standing by a Howdy Doodie ventriloquist dummy.

The box's colors had been bleached by the sun and the plastic wrapper was riddled with holes from inquisitive fingers.

"Who's a Howdy Doodie," the one child asked, giggling at the unusual name.

"He's an old guy. I think my dad mentioned him once when he died," the other replied.

"My God," I thought, "Buffalo Bob and Clarabell are both turning in their graves."

to securing an operating budget for its first year.

By raising more than $8,500 in either check or contract, RFL has met its July 1 deadline, so UK and the city of Lexington will each donate $7,500 for the next three years, plus a combined total of $40,000 in capitalization funds for the station's first year of operation.

"Now it's just a matter of finding out how much the construction costs will be and finding the money to take care of it," Beatty said.

At this time the cost of construction is not known. SAB's allocation will allow RFL to seek an estimate from the Physical Plant Division.

Jack Blanton, vice chancellor for administration, said he has contacted the PPD and that RFL should have its estimate by next week.

One of the major contributors to RFL was Debra Hensley, 3rd District Urban County councilwoman, who donated $1,000 to RFL from her district's Neighborhood Development Fund.

"I really support the cause and feel that the radio station is a very important project for this district," Hensley said. "The University has been a major contributor to the community, and this is our way of helping a student organization to get off the ground."

Mayor Scotty Baesler was originally concerned about Hensley's donation.

"My position was that I didn't want the radio station to use the city's money to match our original $7,500 offer," Baesler said. "However, Councilwoman Hensley assured me that she approached the station first with the offer. They did not solicit her."

Baesler said no problem existed, and that he looked forward to meeting with representatives from RFL in the future.

Correction

Due to a reporter's error, a story in last week's Kentucky Kernel contained some incorrect information. UK only had to freeze 1 percent of its 1987-88 operating budget — $2.7 million — until October. The Kernel regrets the error.

"What you're getting is a savvy, aggressive, problem-solving kind of person," he said.

After touring each of the University's three sectors during the past two months, Roselle says he's enthusiastic about what the University offers.

He knows there will be problems, his wife says, but that keeps him busy.

"I would say he is totally committed to whatever job he is doing," Mrs. Roselle said.

"He loves what he does. He sometimes gets fidgety when he's not thinking about (the University)," she said. "I think he's happier when he's thinking about the problems with his job."

Ever since his appointment in March, Roselle has tried learning everything about the UK system and Kentucky.

He's met both gubernatorial candidates and the governor. He's phoned legislators.

Working often from 7 a.m. until 10 at night, Roselle has had to become a student again for the past 1 1/2 months.

But now he's keeping academic excellence in mind, not just trying to "pass the course."

Governor's Scholars experiencing intellectual life

By RICK JENKINS
Contributing Writer

The 300 high school juniors who will take part in the Governor's Scholars Program at UK for the next three weeks represent a continuing success for the 5-year-old program.

"It is encouraging that on this fifth anniversary of the Governor's Scholars Program, we are able to accept more qualified students than in any other previous year," said Gov. Martha Layne Collins in a press release. "The number of scholars climbed from 250 in the first year to (over 600) in 1987."

Beside the 300 students at UK, another 300 participate in the program at Centre College.

"The program is designed to make learning exciting," said Kenneth Wolf who heads the program on the UK campus. "We don't give grades or credit and there is no competition."

"We want to create an intellectual environment," Wolf said. "It works. Kids get really excited about it."

Twenty-three faculty members instruct the students in 11 major interest areas, ranging from music to science.

To qualify for the program, students must score in the 96th percentile or above in standardized achievement tests and rank in the top 20 percentiles in at least one section of the Prescholastic Aptitude Test-National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test.

"(When) I was picked to represent our school, I was thrilled to say the least," said Amy Adams, representing Anderson County. "I was so excited, I was jumping in my chair."

But there is more to this program than the intellectual side.

Twenty-three residence hall advisers help plan community activities. Students attend personal growth seminars, are offered an array of speakers, go on field trips and participate in extracurricular activities ranging from sports to newspaper production and plays.

"The program is exciting and action packed," said Dan Clemons, student-life coordinator. "We want to ensure that our young people are treated uniquely and that their experience is enriching and that it contributes to their personal growth."

The resident advisers, who are graduate and undergraduate students from various colleges throughout the state, try to help the scholars adjust to the academic community.

"There are few problems because of the amount of activities that we have," Clemons said. But "if one arises, I go directly to the student."

Novelist to lecture on campus

Staff reports

Noted author Bobbie Ann Mason will speak to the Governor's Scholars today at 3 p.m. in 107 Morgan Biological Sciences Building. She will also read from some of her works.

The Kentucky-born writer — she now lives in Pennsylvania — publishes stories about contemporary Kentucky in magazines such as The New Yorker, Atlantic, Vanity Fair and North American Review.

Her works include two story collections, "Nabokov's Garden" and "Shiloh and Other Stories." The latter won the Ernest Hemingway Award and was nominated for the American Book Award and the Pen/Faulkner Award. She also won a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1984.

Her first novel, "In Country," met with critical acclaim when published in 1985. It deals with a young girl in rural Kentucky trying to cope with growing up amid the legacy of the Vietnam War. Critics praised the book for its authenticity and insights.

Before her talk Mason will meet with a group of Governor's Scholars interested in literature.

Mason is a 1962 UK graduate. In 1972 she received a doctoral degree from the University of Connecticut where she is now an assistant professor of English and journalism. Her last visit to UK was in 1986 when she was a featured artist at the Women Writers' Conference.

Senate postpones office hours bill

Staff reports

The UK Student Government Association voted last week to postpone a bill until fall that would tie senators' salaries to their office hours.

Senior Vice President Susan Bridges introduced legislation that would tie senators' salaries to their hours put in the office, at meetings and other SGA functions.

If passed and added to the SGA constitution, senators would not have to attend meetings, but would not get paid for any that they missed, Bridges said.

SGA senators receive $150 a semester for their service.

She said her reasons for creating the bill are that too many senators missed meetings and functions and office hours weren't being kept.

"Student government would be more open to students if they knew they could come in here at a certain hour and see a certain senator," she said.

The decision, however, was voted by the interim senate to be held over until the fall for a full senate vote.

A new SGA award, the J.W. Patterson Award, was introduced by SGA President Cyndi Weaver.

Patterson has been SGA's adviser for 23 years. He is also coach of the UK debate team.

The award will be given annually to a senator who makes an outstanding contribution to the UKSGA. SGA's next meeting, scheduled for July 8, was canceled due to lack of quorum. The next meeting is set for July 22.
