Newton new UK athletics director

President David Roselle puts a UK pin on the new athletics director C.M. Newton yesterday at the Board of Trustees meeting in Patterson Office Tower. Newton will start his duties at UK on April 1.

Vanderbilt coach to take over AD position April 1

By JAY BLANTON
Editor in Chief

C.M. Newton, head basketball coach at Vanderbilt University and a UK alumnus, was named UK athletics director yesterday.

Newton, who has been the men's head basketball coach at Vanderbilt since 1981, will assume the athletics director position April 1 at the conclusion of Vanderbilt's basketball season.

Newton, 58, replaces Cliff Hagan, who resigned as athletics director in November, citing the cloud over the athletics program caused by the NCAA investigation of the men's basketball program.

Joe Burch, who has been interim athletics director since Hagan's resignation, will remain in that position until Newton assumes the job.

"This is an exciting event for me personally," said Newton, who flew to Lexington from Nashville yesterday afternoon. "I am excited and eager to get on with it."

Newton, who was approved as athletics director unanimously by the UK Board of Trustees yesterday, said he is looking "forward to the opportunity and the challenge" of the athletics position.

Much of that challenge will involve repairing a basketball program damaged by 18 allegations of impropriety by the NCAA.

The University has until Monday to respond to the NCAA allegations, which range in severity from offering cash payments to a recruit to handing out T-shirts and tickets to others.

The BOT voted 12-6 yesterday to review the University's response to the allegations in a private meeting to be held either Sunday or Monday.

Newton said he did not know the details of the basketball program's problems with the NCAA, nor did he intend to get involved in the situation until he assumes the athletics position.

But, Newton said, the "manner in which they've conducted this investigation ... is something that's kind of a model."

Newton said that under his administration the UK athletics program will operate "within NCAA and Southeastern Conference rules," and he will not "sacrifice the academic integrity" of the University.

Newton said that his relationship with UK, both as a student at the University and as someone who has competed against it, has allowed him "to study the University in an objective way."

BOT votes to hold closed meeting to discuss investigation

In an uncharacteristic move, the UK Board of Trustees passed a resolution yesterday that requires UK President David Roselle to update them and the Athletics Board on UK's response to the NCAA's allegations against the men's basketball team before it is sent to the NCAA.

BOT members will be updated by Roselle at an executive session that will be held either Sunday or Monday. UK has until Monday to respond to the 18 NCAA allegations against the basketball program.

Roselle had wanted to call the BOT and Athletics Board into executive session after UK's response to the allegations had been sent to the NCAA. Any objections BOT members would have voiced to the response would have been included in an addendum, Roselle said.

But BOT member Tracy Farmer objected, saying the BOT has the right to know what UK's response is before any outside organization is informed.

"I think it's incumbent on all the board members to be kept apprised as where we are," he said. "I don't mean to influence the report one way or another unless ... it was totally unreasonable."

"As a group, the Board of Trustees needs to know as a group, so we can have a discussion ... because it so often happens when someone goes to a university I get conflicting stories."

Roselle said he was not trying to deny any BOT members access to any information about the investigation, but because UK has less than a week to respond to the NCAA's allegations, the response needs to be sent as soon as possible.

"It is the intention to call the board into (executive) session and give a complete report after the response has been sent to the NCAA," he said.

At a special October BOT meeting, board members gave Roselle the complete authority to conduct an independent investigation of the allegations. The 18 allegations against the men's basketball program range in severity from improper inducements, including cash gifts, to recruits to handing out T-shirts and tickets to other recruits.

Yesterday's move by board members to publicly disagree with a UK president was a break from the past when differences between members have been settled behind closed doors and outside of meeting rooms.

Some board members expressed concern over the public perceiving yesterday's move as a possible attempt by the board to influence the response.

"I don't want the perception that we influenced the report," said board member Mary Sue Coleman, a UK professor, who voted against the resolution. "I have to trust the people who prepare the report, and I do."

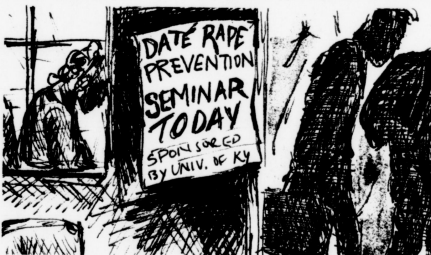

BOT member James L. Rose, who also voted against the resolution, said he did not see the advantage of briefing the board on the response before it is sent to the NCAA.

"I don't think the board ought to be meddling in this report at all," he said. "I

DATE RAPE: Our Hidden Problem

Part 3

More education programs needed, local experts say

By ALLEN D. GREER
Contributing Writer

Acquaintance rape has received increasing attention at UK in the past several years, but some local experts are criticizing UK for not doing more to raise student awareness and educate students in a systematic way.

Acquaintance, or date rape, is forced sexual intercourse or contact—either through assault, manipulation or intimidation—by someone the victim knows.

Jake Karnes, assistant dean of students, said UK conducts awareness programs about date rape, but the current programs don't reach students effectively.

"Even what we consider to be a good turn-out is, percentage-wise, very small," Karnes said.

Additionally, about 40 percent of the residence halls at UK do not participate in any date rape program, said Jim Ploskonka, of the office of Residence Life.

But he added that resident advisers are required to learn preliminary crisis intervention skills and are taught how to make appropriate referrals for rape victims.

Fraternity participation in the education and awareness programs is low, said Michael Palm, assistant dean of students for fraternity affairs.

A Kernel survey of nine sororities at UK revealed that five had participated in some form of date rape education in Conditions have improved in state during first year, Wilkinson says

By MARK R. CHELIGREN
Associated Press

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Gov. Wallace Wilkinson painted a rosy portrait of the state of Kentucky during a televised address last night in which he continued to press for his platform and gave little indication of a willingness to compromise on taxes or education.

Wilkinson applauded improvements in the state's economy and took credit for record employment. He also boasted about turning around the fiscal condition of state government.

The speech was billed by the administration as an off-year state of the commonwealth address. In the speech itself, which was broadcast by Kentucky Educational Television, Wilkinson said it was an opportunity for him to evaluate his own job performance.

Wilkinson said he made the tough decisions that prompted the revitalization of the state.

"It's fair to say that every day, in every way, Kentucky's getting better and better," Wilkinson said in a prepared text of the speech made available prior to its delivery.

On education, Wilkinson reiterated his criticisms of those who have called for more money for the current system of teaching Kentucky children.

"Nothing short of a complete restructuring of our schools will allow substantial improvement," Wilkinson said, sounding a theme he has repeated through several rounds of failed negotiations with lawmakers and educational interests for a compromise education package.

On the subject of taxes, Wilkinson also repeated his long-held opposition.

"No governor in the history of the commonwealth has been under more pressure to raise taxes than I have," Wilkinson said. "But let me say it again, I am not willing to call for new taxes just to continue the same old stuff. We must change."

Gov. Wallace Wilkinson says the state has made many fiscal improvements in his first year as governor.

Wilkinson appealed directly to voters to help him promote his own educational ideas and indicated that he is losing patience with legislators.

The governor said he is being opposed by "the disciples of the status quo in Kentucky education."

"And so, if at times I strike you as hard-headed or strident or stubborn, it's because I am. But it's because I have good reason to be," he said. "If at times it seems like I'm impatient with the state bureaucracy or with some of the hard-working members of the General Assembly, it's because I am. But I have good reason to be."

Wilkinson said his own educational ideas are based on the four points of discipline in the classroom, accountability for schools, parental and community involvement and a return to basics.

He did not spend much time explaining his own plan for education, which has been criticized as vague. Instead, he borrowed a phrase that Soviet Premier Mikhail Gorbachev uses to describe his own plans for that country.

"Simply put, I am proposing 'perestroika,' or restructuring for Kentucky's educational system," Wilkinson said.

'Still Life' puts out call for quality prose from University community

By ERIK REECE
Still Life Editor

This is the official announcement: We are taking submissions for the third issue of Still Life, the literary supplement to the Kentucky Kernel.

Give us your good, your well-wrought, your quality.

The deadline for entries is March 1. We, the editors, welcome any kind of writing in any genre — poetry, prose, experimental or mainstream. Your only restrictions pertain to length. Please keep the prose under 20 pages and the poetry under 10. All submissions must be typed.

Also, include a cover letter containing biographical information. This isn't The New Yorker. We want our readers to know who you are.

If you have been following the progress of Still Life, you know our format. The supplement is designed to include as much quality work as will possibly fit.

We are dedicated to making student writing more accessible to the Lexington community as well as presenting the newest work of more-established writers.

Last year, we published a chapter of Denise Giardina's work-in-progress beside first-rate student fiction and poetry by younger writers.

We feel such a format gives validity to all of the writers presented, known or unknown.

The winners of the Dantzier Fiction Competition and the Farquhar Poetry Prize will be given priority on our pages.

But cover your bases. Submit your work to Still Life as well as to the Dantzier and Farquhar writing contests. Remember, judges and editors don't always agree.

If you are published in Still Life, at least 17,000 readers will have the opportunity to read your piece. That's more than most literary magazines will reach.

Anyway, you have the idea. Address your submissions to: Still Life; Erik Reece; Kentucky Kernel; 635 Journalism Building; University of Kentucky; Lexington, Ky., 40506-0042.

The quality of the fiction and poetry published in last April's edition of Still Life exceeded our expectations and encouraged us greatly. We anticipate with excitement what this year's search will yield.

Brown gets another jail term in Georgia

Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Soul singer James Brown received a six-year prison term Monday after pleading guilty to an array of misdemeanor weapons and traffic charges.

In addition to the prison term, Brown, who also pleaded no contest to charges of driving under the influence, was fined $1,000 by Judge Gayle B. Hamrick.

Adrienne Brown, the singer's 33-year-old wife, was given probation and a $600 fine after pleading no contest to a charge of driving under the influence. It resulted from a September 1987 incident in which she was charged with driving under the influence, speeding and criminal trespass.

Brown's sentence would run concurrently with a six-year term he is serving in South Carolina, Hamrick said. The charges in both states stemmed from a two-state car chase last September.

Brown, 55, disrupted an insurance seminar in an Augusta office building by walking in with a shotgun, officials said. Before officers could arrive, Brown left the building, and the chase began.

Brown said in an interview reported Monday in USA Today that he was "dealing" with being in prison.

Lady Kats dumped by Western

By BRIAN JENT
Assistant Sports Editor

Western Kentucky University senior Debbie O'Connell hit a pair of free throws with 10 seconds left on the clock to ice a 79-75 Hilltopper victory over the Lady Kats last night in Memorial Coliseum.

Her free throws climaxed a night in which Western only missed one from the charity stripe.

"You have to give Western credit for making their free throws down the stretch," UK coach Sharon Fanning said.

At the end of a close first half that featured 12 lead changes, the Hilltoppers went into the locker room with a three-point lead.

Senior guard Susie Starks and junior forward Tandraea Green accounted for 30 of Western's 42 first half points.

"They are two of the best athletes I have ever seen," Fanning said.

The Lady Kats were able to tie the score three times in the opening minutes of the second period, before the Hilltoppers went on a 7-0 run starting at the 18:02 mark.

Western's run was broken by a Vanessa Foster-Sutton layup with 14:30 left in the contest.

WKU's largest lead of the night came at the 11:38 mark when Green hit a 16-foot jump shot to put the Toppers up 39-36.

But UK did not give up. After a timeout, the game went back and forth. The Kats cut the Toppers' lead to three and four on occasions, but in the closing minute, the Toppers controlled a seven point lead.

TRACY COLEMAN/Kentucky Staff
Ruth Ann Mountain lays in two of her 14 points in last night's Lady Kat game. Western Kentucky beat UK by a score of 79-75.

Junior guard Malinka Salhi hit a basket with :31 seconds remaining to make the score 77-74.

After a timeout, UK guard Kristi Cushenberry drew a charge from Green with 11 seconds left.

She converted both free throws of the one-and-one to cut the Toppers lead to two points.

And then O'Connell put the game out of the Kats' reach with her free-throws after being fouled by Salhi.

"I couldn't have asked for a better team effort," Fanning said.

Upset minded Auburn, 0-6 in the SEC, to face Cats

By BARRY REEVES
Staff Writer

Auburn University will be in Rupp Arena tonight entertaining thoughts of upsetting UK in the same fashion as their last trip to Lexington.

Auburn, without its top two scorers, upset the Wildcats, then ranked No. 1 in the nation, 53-52 last year on a three-pointer by John Caylor in the final seconds.

The Cats are not hip to letting that happen again. "All we have to do to get fired up is to look back to last year when we were ranked No. 1 in the nation and they came in here and beat us," UK sophomore center Letton Ellis said. "We will not overlook them this year."

The young Wildcats, with a 9-9 overall record and 4-2 in the Southeastern Conference, may have reason to overlook the Tigers.

Auburn began conference play with a 7-1 record, but the Tigers have lost all six of their SEC games.

"They are way overdo to beat somebody in the SEC. I just hope it is not us," UK guard Derrick Miller said. "They will play us hard. I guarantee that."

Auburn coach Sonny Smith will bring another beat-up team into Rupp Arena tonight.

Caylor, last year's hero of the UK game, broke his foot after only five games. Caylor, a 6-7 junior, was the team's second leading scorer with an average of 15.6 points a game.

Kevin Ardister, a 6-6 junior, was averaging 10.9 points a game in seven games before he was injured.

ABOUT THE GAME

Match-ups: UK, 9-9 (4-2 SEC) vs. Auburn, 7-7 (0-6).

When: 7:30 tonight.

Where: Rupp Arena.

Radio: Live on WLW-700 AM with Cawood Ledford and Ralph Hacker.

Television: Delayed on Channel 27 at 11:30 p.m. with Marty Brennaman, Jack Givens and Rob Bromley.

burn was a fast-paced oriented team before the injuries, but now Smith's team features three guards and a slower, half-court style game.

"They've had to slow it down since they don't have much depth anymore," Casey said. "They play more our style now."

Keenen Carpenter and Derrick Dennison are the class of the trio. Carpenter, a 6-2 senior, is second on the team with a 13.9 average.

Dennison, a 6-3 junior, is third at 12.8 points a game. He is also sixth in the league in assists, dishing out an average of 4.1 per game.

"Dennison is the key to their offense because he is very good athlete who can penetrate and cause you a lot of problems defensively," Casey said.

UK's Miller, a native of Savannah, Ga., has played against Dennison, a native of Atlanta, in several Amateur Athletic Union games.

"I have a lot of respect for Derrick Dennison," Miller said. "He is a very good athlete and a streak shooter. He can really hurt you when he's hot."

The Wildcats, who have had trouble rebounding all season, will have to have a good game in the paint tonight, because Auburn is the top rebounding team in the conference. The Tigers outrebound their opponents by almost six rebounds a contest.

"No doubt that rebounding will be a big key to the game," Casey said. "We will have to do a good job on the boards if we want to win."

"He is going to be a real challenge because he is so slender and quick," Ellis said. "He is just as tough as anybody in this league."

The Tigers take on a much different look after the injuries. Au-

More must be done at University about acquaintance rape

It's a strange thing about acquaintance rape. It's a violation of someone's body. It's a violation of someone's rights. It's a violation of trust.

It's a crime. Yet for some reason, many people don't take the topic seriously. It's no big deal, many say. It's not really rape. Besides, it could never happen to me.

Many people may even be scoffing at the series on date rape the Kernel has been running this week. What good does it do to write about this topic in the student newspaper?

The reason is that we want to raise student awareness about the issue so people realize it's a problem that needs to be dealt with. We want people to think about the attitudes in their relationships that might promote acquaintance rape.

And we want to prompt UK officials and organizations to do more to educate students about this problem, because right now they aren't doing enough.

Currently, there are several University-sponsored education programs on campus, and efforts are being made to increase student awareness of acquaintance rape. Freshman orientation addresses acquaintance rape, and campus officials sometimes present education programs to residence halls and greek houses.

We commend these efforts. However, the treatment of acquaintance rape at freshman orientation is limited since students are bombarded with so much other information in a short period of time.

And the education programs are given only upon request, attendance usually is low, and they don't reach commoner students.

On the topic of education and awareness of acquaintance rape, UK could, and should, do more.

Many universities require that freshmen attend a mandatory seminar on acquaintance rape. UK should create a task force made up of students, faculty and administrators to study this idea, as well as other avenues of education.

By having representation from these different groups, UK could gain a better and more thorough understanding of the situation at UK and what needs to be done. It also could serve as a way to centralize the administration of the University's programs.

And UK should, at the very least, present the education programs in a systematic way, not just upon request, to ensure that all residence halls and greek houses have the opportunity to address the issue.

Student Government Association, as the students' representative, also needs to become more involved. Perhaps SGA could organize a student organization that promotes rape awareness and prevention. The University of Florida, for example, already has for this purpose a student group which created a Dater's Bill of Rights and sponsored a rape awareness week.

Acquaintance rape, it seems, also might be a substantial campaign issue a candidate could address in the upcoming SGA elections.

Even with all the education and awareness programs, the most important step that needs to be taken lies with each of us individually. We need to open our eyes to the problem of acquaintance rape and re-evaluate our values and our attitudes.

Hopefully, then we can erase the cloud that surrounds acquaintance rape and prevent victims from being stigmatized by society.

It's the least we can do.

Letters

NCAA is the real problem

I read recently that the Kernel wrote an editorial some months ago calling for Eddie Sutton's resignation. Not being a regular reader of the Kernel (the last time was probably when I was a UK student), I don't know the content of your editorial, although judging from comments elsewhere, I gather it was strongly worded. Even if I had read it, I doubt that my attitude would be different.

"Getting" people is a favorite sport of writers these days. Scarcely a week passes without some public figure surfacing in the press as the target of an angry editor who cries loudly for the official's resignation.

Unfortunately, in the clamor for journalistic visibility, facts are frequently not allowed to get in the way of making a point. Being the courageous first to demand an individual's departure and public humiliation must be exhilarating, indeed.

That is what bothers me about the Kernel demanding in an editorial for Eddie Sutton to resign. I personally would have preferred for my University to come to the support of one of its own.

Failing that, even in the imperfect world we live in, it would have been — if nothing more — the gentlemanly thing to do to wait until enough facts had been assembled to make a judgment.

And from my distant vantage point, there are allegations galore but few facts.

I am also uneasy with a system that permits someone to be accused, tried and convicted in one fell swoop. NCAA allegations have taken on all the power of a bill of attainder, and public statements by NCAA spokespersons are irresponsible and outrageous.

If this matter were to be settled in a court of law, a judge would throw the case out. When Dale Brown commented that the NCAA's methods were reminiscent of the Third Reich, he was right on the money.

(Apropos of the NCAA, the recent Supreme Court ruling in the Jerry Tarkanian case will only exacerbate the situation. If that "enlightened" ruling doesn't put the fox in charge of guarding the chicken coop, nothing ever will!)

Certainly at this point, there is far more evidence that the NCAA is guilty of malfeasance than there is that Eddie Sutton is guilty of anything. That mess is crying for editorial comment.

The UK basketball program is going to take some hits. The NCAA already has decided that. The question is only how severe the penalties will be.

As for Eddie Sutton, with the NCAA and UK barking at his heels, he has been wise to keep his own counsel. I hope that he is exonerated. And after that, I hope he tells the University of Kentucky to take the job and jam it.

William R. Price is a UK alumnus of 1954.

Feminine needs

Quest for cotton comfort on campus a frustrating search

You can't tell a book by its cover. You can't make a leopard change his spots. And you certainly can't buy a tampon on UK's campus!

Laurie DELK

I'm tired of running all over campus in a time of dire need, searching desperately for a tampon.

If you are female, at some time or another you probably have been a victim of that frenzied, menstruation mentality when you would give anything for a Playtex product just to spare yourself some intense embarrassment.

Those of you who have ever been caught off guard and turn to the University's feminine hygiene products dispensers help to understand my frustration.

It seems that the University takes pleasure in inflicting torture on its female students. Whoever is responsible for stocking the dispensers in the women's rest rooms is hell bent on making a simple transaction like purchasing a tampon as exotic and difficult as a quest for the ark of the covenant.

You must swim the deepest ocean, climb the highest mountain and brave the roughest storm just to get your hands on a cylindrical piece of cotton that might satisfy your body's needs for a maximum of three to four hours.

I went on one of those cotton safaris Monday. My prey was the rare and exotic tampon. Although they are an endangered species on UK's campus, my killer instinct — inspired by mother necessity — led me on an adventure.

Equipped with only a quarter, I searched high and low for one acceptable form of absorbency.

I looked in McVey Hall. I looked in Pence Hall. I looked in the Graham Journalism Building. I looked in Margaret I. King Library. I Did you ever wish your family could be like the one on the "Cosby Show"? It seems like the Huxtables never yell, throw things, slam doors or call each other names. Whenever there is a problem, Cliff and Claire quickly and calmly find a solution.

In reality, however, most families are not like the Huxtables. The Huxtables appear to be an almost unrealistic version of a healthy family. Healthy families allow open and honest communication of all thoughts and feelings, including sadness, anger, joy and fear.

Individual differences among family members are respected and accepted. Problems within the family are acknowledged and resolved. Parents are consistent in what they do and say.

In contrast, unhealthy families are often discouraged, judged and family members are encouraged to conform to family rules.

Problems within the family often are ignored, minimized or blamed on others and remain unchanged or unresolved.

The parents often say, "Do as I say, not as I do." Promises rarely inspired and naive, you willingly dropped in your coin fully expecting to get what you paid for.

The knob turned. Nothing fell. You stood there betrayed, a few cents poorer and a few minutes more desperate.

Thirdly, the feminine hygiene products that were available can best be described as the Tyrannosaurus Rex of Kotex.

It must be noted that maxi-pads were the only feminine hygiene products I found on campus, and by the looks of them, they should be obsolete.

On the outside of the box, the manufacturer of these cotton planks prides itself on the fact that

Try walking around campus with a two-by-four between your legs and see how freely and easily you attend to your daily business.

All I remember is that it wanted a quarter and since the White Hall Classroom Building dispenser had eaten one of my dimes, I had only 15 cents.

Much can be said about my tampon tour. Therefore, I'll say much: First, many of the feminine hygiene dispensers on campus are out of order. No ifs, ands or buts, the well is dry!

Secondly, those that aren't out of order are tampon leases. I'll explain. The leases are those dispensers that allow you to think they're full, yet neglect to dispense a tampon after you insert your money.

Girls, you've been there. At one time or another you have been on this campus and in need. You were encouraged by the fact that there was no "Out of Order" sign on your particular dispenser.

FOR THE HEALTH OF IT

are kept and excuses are frequently made.

Unhealthy families are one in which you may find one or a combination of the following: physical, verbal and/or sexual abuse; routine use of alcohol or drugs; frequent overeating, spending or gambling; divorce, adoption or death of an immediate family member; rigid or inflexible beliefs.

Research has shown that some individuals from families with unhealthy patterns experience certain common characteristics which may include:

- Guessing at what normal behavior is. How could you know what normal is since your home life was inconsistent and chaotic? You know that things are supposed to be different in a healthy family, but you have no idea how to achieve that. You may find yourself asking, "I wonder what it would be like to be a part of another family?" or "I wonder if I'm crazy?"
- Feeling different from other people. This may include feeling isolated, lonely or not feeling as though you "fit in," but not knowing why. You may find yourself saying, "No one understands how I feel." Sometimes people who feel this way become "people-pleasers" in order to gain acceptance and approval from others.

People who fall into this category may find themselves "going along with the crowd" even when that is not their preference.

➤ Experiencing difficulty in establishing and maintaining intimate, healthy relationships. With unclear ideas about what a healthy relationship is, it can be difficult to find relationships and keep them.

Since relationships are difficult to maintain, one may feel extremely loyal and remain in a relationship when it might be healthier to end it.

➤ Judging oneself harshly and being self-critical. This could include derogatory statements such as, "If I wasn't stupid, I'd make better grades" or "If I had a better personality, I'd have more friends" or "If I wasn't such a failure, my parents would be proud of me."

Unrealistic expectations and perfectionism can lead to continuous self-criticism.

➤ Difficulty following a project through from beginning to end. Again, if your role models ineffectively solved problems, you would not be equipped with the necessary skills needed to complete a task. A fear of failure or lack of confidence might prevent completion of a project.

If you feel that you would like to further explore these issues, a support group may assist you in beginning to understand yourself and your feelings.

A group for Adult Children of Alcoholics and others who identify will be offered through the Mental Health Clinic in the Student Health Service. The group will be limited to 10 people and will begin the week of Feb. 6.

If you are interested, call 233-5511 between the 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m. for a screening appointment, no later than Feb. 2.

Liz Corio and Paulette Powell are counselors in the Mental Health Clinic in Student Health Services.

Try walking around campus with a two-by-four between your legs and see how freely and easily you attend to your daily business.

Maybe this is a bit of an exaggeration, but I can assure you that women are this self-conscious about wearing these maxis. I stress the word maxi-pads as any normal person would be walking around with a board between their legs.

Whoever is responsible for the placement of these items, take note: Women want to wear tampons now. They're comfortable and most importantly, they're not noticeable.

Yes, we wear pads as well, but high technology has thinned them out and made them more absorbent.

They even have flaps now, fondly referred to as wings. Just to recap — we want strings and wings!

By the way, I finally found my long-anticipated tampon. I was tempted to gold-plate it and display it among trophies and plaques as a token of personal accomplishment. But, I needed it too badly.

I haven't always depended on the kindness of strangers. But desperate needs call for desperate measures.

Therefore, I was reduced to the act of bumming a tampon from a friend. This was not my choice for securing my tampon but it was, unfortunately, the only means.

I've given you an issue. I've given you a laugh. Since things seem to come in threes, maybe some serious attention to this problem will be the finishing touch to the triplet.

After all, I'm sick of playing this monthly game of Cathy Rigby roulette.

C.M. Newton will return to alma mater to run the athletics program

Newton, who received a bachelor's degree in physical education and a master's in education administration from UK in the 1950s where he lettered in basketball, has held a variety of positions in athletics in the last three decades.

Before coming to Vanderbilt, Newton was assistant commissioner of the SEC for one year in 1980. Before that, he had been head basketball coach at the University of Alabama for 12 years.

Newton also was head basketball coach and chairman of Physical Education and Athletics at Transylvania University in Lexington from 1953-68.

In 1984, Newton was administrative head and assistant coach for the U.S. Olympic Team, which captured a gold medal in Los Angeles. Newton also has been a member of several NCAA committees and coaching organizations.

Last Saturday, Newton won his 50th college basketball game as Vanderbilt defeated the University of Texas.

About 50 people had applied for the athletics director position, but UK President David Roselle said Newton was his first choice for the position.

Newton's selection, Roselle said, "marks a new day" for the athletics program, which has established exemplary athletics programs in several areas.

Rebuilding the basketball program, Roselle said, "will require a person of proven ability (with the highest personal and professional integrity)." Newton's management philosophy is "compatible with these goals."

Roselle said selecting Newton for the athletics position will send a signal to the NCAA, which is expected to consider allegations against UK April 22-24 in Charleston, S.C., that UK is serious about its commitment to running a clean program.

However, Roselle said that did not play into the selection of Newton before the University's Monday deadline of responding to the NCAA allegations against the basketball program.

Newton said his management style will involve hiring good people, and then letting them do their jobs.

"I'll make the tough decisions," Newton said. But Newton said he would seek input from his staff in making those decisions.

Newton had been rumored to be the leading candidate for the athletics position since Hagan's resignation in November.

Newton said he met with the search committee about two weeks ago, and was offered the position about 10 days ago. But Newton said he did not decide to accept the position until Friday.

Although he has not signed a contract with the University yet, Newton will be paid a little more than $100,000 a year, according to Roselle. Hagan had been paid more than $80,000.

UK basketball coach Eddie Sutton said he was "very pleased with the naming of C.M. Newton (as Athletic Director)."

"C.M. and I have been good friends for a long time," Sutton said. "I think (the selection committee) made a good choice. His working inside the Southeastern Conference for so long is a plus because he knows the conference so well."

Burch, who had been nominated for the permanent athletics position by several people, said he looked forward to returning to UK's legal counsel where he was before assuming the interim athletics position.

Information for this story also was gathered by Staff Writer Barry Reeves.

Education still needed, local counselors say the past academic year while four had not.

Karnes said the difficulty in getting people to attend the programs is frustrating.

Laura Drew, community education specialist at the Lexington Rape Crisis Center, said she thinks UK needs to give the subject more impetus.

"I think the University needs to do much more education and consciousness-raising. People might start stepping out and saying, 'Hey, that happened to me,'" Drew said.

Stephanie Bastin, crime prevention coordinator for the UK Police Department, said she would like to see a mandatory program, and noted that the majority of incoming freshmen are in the age group most susceptible to date rape.

"Several years ago, there was a feeling that there was a cover-up here—I don't feel that way."

"It would be nice to make that kind of information available to people, but I don't see any way possible to require (attendance)," Karnes said.

There has been only one reported rape on campus since 1984, according to UK police chief W.H. McComas, but some experts think these statistics may not accurately reflect the true scope of the problem.

"Just because it's not in black and white doesn't mean that it's not happening," said Paullet Powell, a therapist at UK's Mental Health Clinic, which counsels rape victims. "That's certainly a very misleading number. I have no doubt that (date rape) is happening at UK."

Bastin, who presents some of UK's rape education programs, agrees with Powell.

"I have four, five girls a semester come up to me after presentations and tell me they are victims of date rape," Bastin said. "For every five girls that come forward and tell me and we talk about it, how many more do we not know about?"

"Our society defines rape as something that happens to you in a dark alley, by a total stranger at gunpoint," said Pam Remer, a counselor at UK's Counseling Psychology Services.

"When it isn't by a stranger, and it isn't in a dark alley, and it isn't at gunpoint, you say to yourself, 'a: I wasn't really raped; and b: it was my fault.' As soon as you say, 'it was my fault,' the shame is incredible. You're not likely to tell anybody."

Remer said she doesn't accept rape prevention methods that encourage women to modify their behavior and follow restrictions.

"I don't want to live my life in a jail, and I don't want to be blamed if I don't abide by those rules and I get raped," she said.

Nikki Fulks, associate director of UK's Counseling and Testing Center, stresses clear communication to help prevent rape.

"Sometimes people say, 'Well, I thought that's what she wanted,' or 'She dropped the hint,'" Fulks said. "You have to be very clear about your limits and about what you're expecting. I think men and women have a responsibility in that regard."

"We give people in our culture a message that this is permissible. What happens is that guys don't see themselves as rapists because they have grown up with the message that a little aggressive sex is okay," Drew said.

Other efforts at education and awareness on campus include a self-defense seminar sponsored by the Panhellenic Council during freshman orientation.

The November, 1988 seminar featured 45 minutes of instruction on self-defense in a variety of situations, including rape, said Connie Nitzken, Panhellenic Council president.

personally feel it's an administrative project at this time."

However, board member Larry Forgy, who voted for the resolution, said it was not an "unreasonable request" for board members to be updated about the response before it is sent to the NCAA.

"I do not intend to allow... to superimpose the judgement of this board (on the decision)," he said. "However, it was a reasonable request for this board... to be informed of the decision of this administration."

While Forgy said some people may choose to interpret the resolution as an attempt to influence the response, he said, "I don't think this board has any intent of watering it down or subverting the truth."

Forgy declined to comment on his resolution after the meeting.

Roselle said UK will have a meeting with the NCAA "around March 1" to alter or delete any of the allegations against the program. UK also will submit a report to the Southeastern Conference.

Should any new information about the allegations surface between Monday and March 1, Roselle said the University will send an addendum to the NCAA.

The NCAA Rules Infraction Committee is expected to consider the allegations against UK April 22-24 when it convenes in Charleston, S.C.

Roselle assured the BOT, as he has done several times in the past, that UK will defend any unfounded allegations against the program.

"We intend to defend the program and persons as vigorously as possible against any unsubstan-
