Brawn -- And Beans

The University should have a great football team this year. In fact, it should be the finest ever to don the Blue and White.

On or off the field, members of the team tirelessly devote themselves to eating, sleeping, and drinking football. While tricky and deceptive tactics are used in sleeping or drinking are unknown, but the average patron of the Union cafeteria is well-acquainted with the brilliant maneuvering and scintillating strategy which they use to crash the cafeteria line.

The coordinated attack, a beauty to watch, generally revolves about a two-fold plan, each limited to a split-second, and executed with all the precision and deadliness of a military operation. A couple of emancipated 200-pounders begin the break-in by edging up close to the head of the line as it forms, probably crushing several old ladies and co-eds who probably don't know that the gridding gentlemen are undernourished and apparently exempt from sweating out the line. After all, the star athletes might collapse from sheer hunger; then they would be sorry.

With the advance agents securely planted, the main body begins to emerge from the grill. The plan is progressing nicely. The hostess is gone—monstrously and apparently exempt from sweating out the line. The long thin line is now three deep near the front, and after fifteen minutes those who are so unfortunate as to indulge the "courtesy" of the line crushers emulate the snail.

Viewed with mingled amusement and frustration, this situation is enacted daily. Sweating out lines is nothing new to the great majority of students now eating at the cafeteria. From freshman registration to graduation, college life is one line after another. Since "nothing comes to him who waits," courtesy in observing another's position isn't too much to ask. —B. B.

Nicotine Nightmare

Latest scientific wonder to take its place alongside the atom bomb, jet propulsion, and penicillin is the discovery of a cigarette paper that sheds water, perfected by American scientists to permit smokers to enjoy dry fogs in the rain.

Presumably we can expect the announcement at any time from the tobacco experts that they have reached the heights attained by the fountain pen technicians, with a coffin nail that burns under water.

What a boon for sponge divers, bathroom baritones and summertime swimmers! No longer need we forego a lift from our favorite weed while searching the floor of the sea, taking a quick shower, or ducking for apples. Students seeking solitude could retire to the bottom of the nearest pool, light up a smoke, whip out their trusty pen (guaranteed to write under water) and prepare their lessons with only occasional interruptions as they surface for a breath of air.

A discouraging fact faces these enterprising scientists, however. The perfect solution for absorbing the daily ration of nicotine was reached many, many years ago by the manufacturers of plug chewing tobacco. Come rain or shine, sleet or snow, hail or high water, a man-sized cut tucked smartly in one cheek assures satisfaction, unmarred by the need for a good waterproof match.—The Tech Talk.

That's a Joke, Son

The moon was low, As was the wall on which we sat, Our dream, We planned Tomorrow. Tomorrow came, Not what we dreamed, Not what we planned, But calamine for poison oak. Curious: "And how were you wounded?" G. I.: "By a shell." Curious: "Did it explode?" G. I.: "No, it crept up close and bit me."

The girl in the modern bathing "a little" is warned to be careful not to catch cold. One sneeze and she'd be a nudist.

The average Kentucky co-ed is a girl of few words: NO and DON'T.

Then there was the deaf mute who had a nightmare and broke his knuckles on the bedpost screaming.

We wonder why the stork gets blamed for a lot of things some copy of your circular letter, and other bird is responsible for.

She was only a second-hand dealer's daughter and that's why she wouldn't allow much on the oldavenport.

Virginia had a little quart of cider, hard as steel, And everywhere she went folks laughed To see Virginia reel.

Salesman (addressing company receptionist): "Is the boss in?" Office girl: "I'm sorry, he is not." Salesman: "Will he be back after a little?"

"The girl in the modern bathing a little" is warned to be careful not to catch cold. One sneeze and she'd be a nudist.

I think that I shall never see A poem lovely as a tree. —FIDO

Life, Liberty, and Pursuit of Wright or Wrong

By Adele Denman

(Columnist's Note: It is more fun to go on strike. In fact every University student should do it at least once just to learn that it doesn't pay. My reasons are these: (1) The Kernel was just ruined for me last week. I only read my own column, and imagine my disappointment when I eagerly grabbed for the Kernel, turned to Denman's column and found that it was on strike. Most thwarting incident in the world. (2) I didn't get the $10.00 I had planned about it. I was on strike. When and if, and by any chance they decide to give me a diploma in August, I shall walk up, receive my diploma, and hand the dean a bill for $10. (You are hereby invited to my graduation.) (3) Every radical on the campus rallied to my cause. "Let's blow up the University," they muttered. "Let's all strike," they hissed. "Come to our secret meeting tonight," they signaled to me in classes. Yes, dear reader—strike while the iron is hot. The more the rain, the more is a chance of its striking you back.)

LIFE: Enough of this foolishness. Let's go to 50 other things. Remember the big rain last week? Well, there is one co-ed on this campus who has never struck. He is a member of persons got a drenching in the rain, so know that many will agree with me that a wet time will wash away the rain. The more the rain, the more the rain is certainly not the prohibition to you.

Now back to our co-ed. She leaped out of bed, grabbed her new dress of the rayon composition and dashed (with it on) to across the campus to class. Then the rains came. The more the rain, the more her dress went.

She ran toward the museum. The door was locked, not by her shelter from the rain. . . . On White Hall. . . can't go there. . . . Where to go. . . . What to do. And now gentle readers, we draw the curtain of charity over the next scene.

Now that it is all over, and the dress has been safely burned. . . . you blame that? . . .

If June is the month of young love, we could safely say that July was the month for old loves. We could say the surprise of a happy young couple when they saw a very respectable, and slightly venerable couple of about 50 years walking up the driveway of Path Hall and sit down on the bench in the quadrangle, and do the same thing that the young couple was engaged in—a wee bit of lovemaking.

By Hugh Collett

Once upon a time there was a little boy whose name was Little Blue Walking Betwixt—for convenience we shall refer to him as Junior. He was a wonderful specimen of youth and a innocence—just like all male UK students. In fact, he was a male UK student. Junior, although Blue by name, was green by virtue that he had just recently entered the University.

Everybody liked Junior, and all the fraternities gave him the rush—so did the sororities (as individuals). After much consideration, Junior finally pledged Alpha Chi Omega. (All due respects to Max Schulman.)

One summer's evening, Junior was resting peacefully about the living room floor of the fraternity house. He hadn't a care in the world, just sitting there reading his pledge lesson.

And then, out of the blue, a big old man active of Alpha Chi Omega swooped down upon Little Junior and erected his limbs to standard position.

And then he commanded in a loud and commanding voice, "Set him free. Catch the girl!" And it was done for his word was law.

"I have saved you, my boy. She will be justly punished," said the old man. "But what will you do with her?" asked Junior.

"Expel her," said the spirit with reverent gusto.

"And what will you do with me?" asked Junior.

"I shall give you the light!" I shall give you the light!

And he did!

These little friends, is why there are searchlights about the campus today.

And then, as we have searchlights, Dorian Pink cannot scare little innocent boys at night when they are going across the campus for an active Alpha Chi Omega. In fact, Dorian Pink no longer exists on the UK campus. Neither does the R.A. in every fair tale. This little story has a moral: Don't join the fraternities. And don't read editorials or you'll get ideas to write stories like this.

Quite often I've found myself embarrassed when I couldn't answer upon the question of traditions as you well know. Well, this particular ad was one for a well-known restaurant called the Canary Cottage and it mentioned specifically that going to the Cottage was and is an "Old U. of K. Custom." Well, well, I guess that is a nice tradition of our tradition started University. The ad said so, and we all know it is true. And we wonder why people don't like dances at the Union.

PURSUIT: And now, (sharp, sharp) here is that good ole ghost that gets everyone in so much trouble. Tri Deit Rosaland Routh and Sid Ned Breathitt have been dating pretty consistently. Six couples were Ferguson certainly does miss a boy called Rodney. Meg Tindler and Ben Sullivan might be patching it up. Tony Shrivie just carried her wedding ring around until the time when she may wear it.

Pinning this week seem to come from the Kappa Sig exclusively; Rose Rich and Liz Thomas (of Jewell hall) seem to like each other's company lots. Meg Tindler and Ben Sullivan might be patching it up. Tony Shrivie just carried her wedding ring around until the time when she may wear it.

By Bill Spragens

President H. L. Donovan of the University of Kentucky told me he had had to close the question state rolls several months ago. Only 15 percent of non-resident students are admitted.

So writes Benjamin Fine, New York Times education editor, in the August issue of Pica magazine. Fine's statement is made in connection with the figures given in "Pica," the normal enrollment at the University in peacetime is 3,500. Some 6,000 students, 4,000 of whom are expected this fall at the University according to the magazine. This estimate may have been somewhat revised since Mr. Fine obtained his figures, since it is now considered likely that enrollment will be limited to 5,000 come September.

Turning to nationwide statistics, we find that of the 900 colleges and universities to which questionnaires were sent, 964 expect to have capacity enrollment this fall. Eighty do not expect to be filled. When it comes to rejecting students this fall, 256 plan to do so, with 140 planning to accept all comers and 48 uncertain. All but nine of the colleges and universities will accept out-of-town students.

Not surprising is the statement that only 127 of the schools can furnish sufficient housing. While 295 of the institutions have sufficient classrooms and labs and the same number have enough faculty members, 65 do not have sufficient classroom space, and 41 lack enough trained instructors.

The 500 colleges and universities which have a total peacetime enrollment of more than 10,000 and expect an aggregate enrollment of over 1,000,000 in September. About 400,000 of these will be veterans, if predictions are correct.

Many American Girls Won't Get To College Post Writer Predicts

With a war veterans jamming classrooms in quest of higher education, many American girls will never get to college, according to an article in the August 3 Saturday Evening Post.

"Many state institutions are refusing admission to out-of-state women, and it seems inevitable that these schools will clamp down further," writes Milton MacKaye in an article, "Crisis at the Colleges."

"Speaking of the record, and, regrettably, a number of educators predict such a tightening of the situation that many American girls presently of college age will never be allowed to matriculate," the article continues.

With almost 400,000 veterans attending colleges or universities at the close of the school year and more than 1,000,000 more expected to seek admission by September, the American educational system is "in the middle of the gravest crisis in its history," the article reports. Colleges do not have the facilities, the housing, the instructors, even the classrooms, to handle the multitude.

I. Walkimni Sleeps Has Get-Up Schedule

By Marjorie Taylor Do you have trouble getting up in the morning? Uh, huh—I thought so.

Dr. I. Walkimni Sleeps, President of the American Society of Early Risers, after much perturbation and yawning has formulated a getting-up schedule for college students with 8:25 classes. (More about 7:00p.m. later. You're too sleepy by now to read it anyway.)

7:00—The student should jump neatly out of bed at the sound of the alarm. But does he or she? (Sarcastic laughter.) He lies there and bitterly condemns—hardly the word for it—whenever arranges time schedules. Then back to sleep.

7:15—Some confounded eager beaver has set an alarm clock across the hall, and Student leaps out of bed only to realize that it is not his own. More unprintable thoughts. 7:45—Yes, he was able to sleep a half hour in peace. Requested to brighten up the room and display the smiling faces of friends presently in bed. . . . An orange crate can become a useful cupboard with very little

University Co-Eds Worried By Many Storage Problems

By Margaret Dickey Finding a place for the many troubles and material. There is always some piece of discarded clothing in the average co-ed's wardrobe. By cutting up the article and tacking the material over the rough boards of the crate the transformation is complete.

To protect crumpled blouses many co-eds take a broom handle and place it over the side bars of the closet. Articles of clothing which are not full length can be hung on this and protection will be given for not only these items, but for other articles of clothing as well.

Many of the girls purchase cardboard closets which will fit comfortably into a corner and which will hold blouses and dresses which might not have a place in the already too-crowded closet. To brighten up the room and display the smiling faces of friends presently in bed. . . . An orange crate can become a useful cupboard with very little

By Jim Wood If you think that feeding hungry University students at the cafeteria is an easy job, just ask Miss Jennie May Trigg of the University Commons, who supervises the serving of more than 2,500 meals daily. This job requires the services of a staff of 75, not including student employees, which prepares, cooks and serves about 400-500 portions for breakfast, 1,000-1,200 for lunch, and 500-1,000 for dinner and involves the cooking of 600 pounds of potatoes seven bushels of beans, 15 bushels of spinach and 400 pounds of meat each meal, not including the food oil.

Australian Seeks Library Position In Kentucky

Interested in library work and anxious to obtain a position in Kentucky because she has read so much about "this delightful country," Cynthia J. Green, 21-year-old Australian girl, wrote Miss Kate Irvine, assistant reference librarian at the University, for certain information and advice.

Miss Green, now employed by the Barr Smith Library at the University of Adelaide in South Australia, said in her letter, which reached Miss Irvine on Wednesday, that she had seen the Kentucky librarian's name and address listed in a recent issue of the American Library Association Handbook. She continued, "I have taken the liberty to try writing, hoping perhaps that you can supply me with information about any suitable positions that might be offered in 1947 or 1948."

Softball Begins; Tennis Out

By Hal Yard

Softball play got under way yesterday afternoon in the second term of summer intramurals with eleven teams entered in the competition for the trophies. The intramural tennis tournament which was scheduled to begin today was cancelled, because of the small number of entries received.

Bill McCubbin, intramural director, said the number of entries in the tennis tournament was small, because of the Blue Grass tournament which is being played next week, and offers bigger prizes. Entry fees will be refunded to those who entered the intramural tourney.

The 11 teams in the softball tournament have been divided into two divisions, and will play on the round-robin basis until August 14, after which a draw will be made and elimination play for the trophies started. This system of dividing the teams into two groups schedules play so that each team has at least one day rest between games.

Play in Division I will continue through August 14, while Division II will wind-up on August 13. In case of rain or wet grounds, Coach McCubbin will re-schedule games postponed.

The official 1946 softball rules shall govern all games. Games will be played on both the U-High field and the field behind the Men's gym.

For a complete list of all games to be played, consult official schedule printed on this page.

Former Kentucky Tackle Returns

Bill Griffin, former Wildcat tackle, has officially reported to Coach Bryant and will be out for practice this fall, it was announced by the Athletic department.

Tackles are one of Bryant's weak spots on the coming team and the 96", 220 pound player from the 1942 squad should help fill the job. He will report for fall practice.

Fall practice is scheduled to start August 19.

A game unique in University of Kentucky football history occurred in 1900. Kentucky beat the Louisville Y.M.C.A. 12-6 without running an offensive play during the game. Kentucky would kick on all games every time it received the ball. Scores were made by the Kentucky players through recovery of Y.M.C.A. fumbles.

The University of Kentucky football team of 1902 was ruined by a male which dug the hole that tripped and injured one of the team's best players.

TIME OUT!

By O. C. Halyard, Jr.

Since it is not likely that a miracle will happen between now and November 28 to solve the seating problem at the basketball games, it looks as if we will have to sit patiently by and accept one of the two solutions offered by the Athletic department. Both solutions have definite advantages and disadvantages, the most important of which we shall try to show.

The solution of dividing the games between the students according to the numbers on their tickets would supposedly assure each student of seeing half of the home games. However, the smooth worker will undoubtedly obtain from some person who doesn't desire to see the team in action, a ticket book with a different number from his and thus be on hand to see all games.

Remember how the tickets to last year's Notre Dame game seemed to vanish only to turn up in the hands of a few scalpers before the game.

If the number solution is used, half the ticket books will be good for each game, or an estimated 2,500 student tickets will be valid. In this case you are going to have over 2,000 students at each game, or nearly as many as showed up at the most crowded games last season.

A good factor about the number system is that there would be students on hand to root for their team at each of the home games. A student section showing a lot of school spirit is a big help to the team when they are playing.

Students and Townspeople

The other solution to the problem, that of dividing the home games between the townspeople and the students, has its advantages as well as its disadvantages. It is our understanding that if such a division was made the students would get the larger portion of the games with possibly only four or five games being assigned to Lexingtonians.

If this proved to be the case, it would mean that the whole student body would be able to see about three-fourths of the games instead of just one-half. Also you would have the whole student body present at the same time and there could be no complaint about one group getting to see better games than the other.

However, in either solution, the committee will divide the schedule between the students or between the townspeople and students so that each group will get to see some of the better games. Of course in the latter solution, with the outsiders getting to see only a small portion of the home games, the question is going to arise who should get to see the Tennessee game played here. This is just one such question which could arise. With the townspeople getting to see only a few games, they naturally think they should get to see the big rivalry game, and the students know it's their privilege to see any Kentucky-Tennessee game.

The big objection to this solution in my opinion is that there would be home games at which there would be no student section. It wouldn't be as bad for the team as playing additional games away from Lexington, where there would be a crowd partial to the other team, but there still wouldn't be the good old student section on hand to cheer and shout.

FOULS AND PENALTIES:

In case you haven't heard, here's one of the latest solutions offered to the seating question by a Wildcat fan. The hopeful rooster suggested stretching a tent over Stoll field and putting in a temporary roof between the 35 yard lines.

"Jones breaks through the forward wall, takes a pass from Beard, and goes under for a shot, but there's a whistle on the play."

250 Expected For Coaching Clinic Aug. 28

The University of Kentucky Coaching Clinic, to be held between August 28-31 promises to be a success. Athletic Director Bernie Shively announced that 150 coaches have already made reservations for the clinic and that he anticipates an enrollment of more than 250 before it starts.

The purpose of the clinic is to raise the quality of athletic competition in the state of Kentucky. Next year the plans are to add a baseball and a track coach to the staff which now only includes football and basketball.

Highlight of the clinic will be the other high school basketball game to be played August 30 between the East all-stars and the West all-stars. Paul Jenkins of Louisville Male high school will coach the West team, and Bobby Laughlin of Breckencree high will have charge of the East team.

SPORTS CALENDAR

In an effort to keep Kernel readers better informed as to sports activities about the campus, the staff will endeavor to publish a sports calendar each week previewing the coming week in sports. However, because of the possibility that we may overlook a scheduled event, we would appreciate the assistance of the various organizations as well as individuals. If you know of a sporting attraction coming up that the other students will be interested in, drop us a note at the KERNEL NEWS ROOM. Help us to help you.

Donovan Okays Night Football

Dr. H. L. Donovan, president of the University, testified in Louisville this week that night football games played on Stoll field do not disturb him or his family.

The University president appeared at a hearing in the Jefferson Circuit Court on protests to installing lights for night football games at Manual high school in Louisville.

"Night games offer an opportunity to a great number of people to get recreation, who otherwise would not have any," Dr. Donovan said.

Blue Grass Tennis Tournament Starts Monday; Over 60 Entered In Competition For Trophies

The Blue Grass Tennis Tournament is scheduled to start Monday, August 5, with over 60 entries in singles and doubles getting in under the deadline. All games will be played on the Downing courts and admission will be free.

There will be at least 12 entries in the Junior division singles, and four in the doubles. In the Men's division there are at least 44 entries in singles and 21 doubles. There is a possibility that a few entries mailed just before the deadline may not have arrived as yet.

Drawings will be made the last part of this week and contestants notified so that play can begin on schedule Monday. However, because of the large number of entries, the committee may find it necessary to continue the tournament beyond the August 10 finals date.

Bill McCubbin, University representative on the committee, said they hoped it would not be necessary for any player to participate in more than one match each day. Also rain during the next week would necessitate extension of the tournament beyond Saturday.

The Co-Operative Club and the Kiwanis Club each have donated a trophy to be presented in the tournament. Other trophies may be received before the tournament starts.
