Fake ID found on UK student killed in automobile accident

By KRISTI WILLETT
Contributing Writer

A fake ID was found on the body of a UK student killed Tuesday night in a one-car accident on Euclid Avenue, according to Lexington Police Sgt. Ted Hudson.

Lisa Whalen, 20, a UK junior from Edgewood, Ky., was riding with Brad Shipman, the driver of the car, and Michael Thomas Swerczek when Shipman's Camaro went out of control and struck a telephone pole.

"Fake IDs are a big problem at UK," Hudson said. "People are making and selling them there, and then using them to buy alcohol. This accident is a classic example of how three lives can be ruined."

Shipman, a 20-year-old UK junior, was not injured in the accident, police said. Swerczek was listed in critical condition with head injuries last night at UK Chandler Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said. Swerczek, 20, also is a UK junior.

Whalen was pronounced dead shortly after being taken to Good Samaritan Hospital, a spokeswoman said.

Hudson said a fake ID was found on Whalen during a preliminary investigation. It has not been determined yet if Swerczek or Shipman also were carrying fake IDs, Hudson said.

Shipman lost control of his car, striking a telephone pole after attempting to change lanes at a high speed, police reports said. The car skidded sideways and ran up on the sidewalk at Kentucky Court.

WHALEN

Shipman told police he was showing off his new car.

"The car was approaching me from the rear when it swerved around, passing me really fast," said Richard Marshall, a witness. "I heard his engine coming up behind me so fast at first I thought it was a motorcycle."

"He sped by me, tried to swerve in front of another car, and then dart back and that's when he lost control," said UK senior Bob Hickey, another witness. Candice Castle, an emergency medical technician and UK student, was the first person to reach Whalen after the accident.

"I saw the Camaro, actually, I heard him accelerating and it caught my attention," she said. "He was trying to cut back into the right-hand lane when he lost control of the car and started spinning."

Castle said she tried to administer mouth-to-mouth resuscitation to Whalen while she was still seat-belted in the car.

The Camaro of UK student Brad Shipman slammed into a telephone pole Tuesday night, killing one passenger and critically injuring another. Shipman pleaded not guilty to DUI charges yesterday.

Legislator tells students UK a priority

By JAY BLANTON
Editor in Chief

State Rep. Ernesto Scorsone, pointing to his close affiliation with UK and higher education, told students last night that if re-elected he would continue to advocate UK as the state's premier academic institution.

"In the last four years we've had some difficult times," Scorsone told about 40 students attending the College Democrats meeting last night. "We need to have the University of Kentucky as the major research, the comprehensive institution in this state."

Scorsone, who is running for re-election to the state House in the 75th district, said Kentucky can't afford to have several "full-fledged" universities.

"We cannot sacrifice the University for some of the other regional institutions," said Scorsone, who is a member of the House education committee. "We just simply do not have the money in this state — the University of Kentucky clearly has to be the highest priority."

Although avoiding the question of whether he would push for a tax increase to give needed revenues for higher education, Scorsone said that in the 1990 session he would again advocate conformity to the federal tax code, which would bring an estimated $100 million in revenues.

Scorsone pointed to the need for consistent state funding for the universities.

In North Carolina, a state that has experienced "tremendous growth" in the last 20 years, the state government has worked with the universities by supporting the schools with continuous funding.

To that end, Scorsone said he is in favor of maintaining formula funding for the state universities.

The state Council on Higher Education currently is reviewing its funding formula, which determines state appropriations to universities.

However, the two-term legislator acknowledged that UK and its community colleges have not received adequate funding in comparison with the other state universities.

On a percentage basis, UK and the University of Louisville are funded below the other six state universities by the formula, which has the UK administration concerned.

The funding formula has the support of all the state universities and is an objective way of determining appropriations to the schools, Scorsone said. "Our first priority should be to improve that formula and try to fund UK and try to fund the community college system" at the full funding level.

Scorsone also told the students that the state legislature must continue to work toward keeping universities accessible, by maintaining low tuition.

"We cannot allow the cost of higher education to get to a degree that we're keeping capable, intelligent Kentuckians Presidential candidate Michael Dukakis waves to Legionnaires.

Dukakis calls for stronger defense in Legion speech

By C.A. DUANE BONIFER
Editorial Editor

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Pledging to have a strong and better-managed defense, Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis addressed about 6,000 members of the American Legion here on the 70th national convention's final day.

Dukakis, who has been characterized by Republican presidential candidate Vice President George Bush as a soft-on-defense Northeastern liberal, tried to shed that image yesterday, saying the United States must reduce the threat of the Soviet Union's nuclear arsenal and "strengthen our conventional forces."

The three-term Massachusetts governor also pledged to help U.S. military veterans during his administration by elevating the Veterans Administration to a cabinet-level position, continuing to search for soldiers missing in action in the Vietnam and Korean wars, and having a "top-notch" veterans' health-care system.

There was some concern by legionnaires that Dukakis might be heckled from Bush supporters in the audience because of the reaction Democratic Arizona Dennis DeConcini received Wednesday.

During DeConcini's speech, he was interrupted several times by hecklers and American Legion National Commander Jake Comer had to ask for quiet. However, the only response Dukakis received from the audience was several loud cheers of approval.

Dukakis praised the Reagan administration for signing the Intermediate Nuclear Forces treaty last year, but added that "we must build on that treat-ty, to make this world a safer place for our children, and our way of life."

"And yet today, all of us here, have the best opportunity of our lifetime to reduce the risk of nuclear war," he said.

Dukakis repeated his theme of economic strength as one of the keys to military might.

"We cannot build a strong national defense on a mountain of debt," he said. "We cannot build a strong national defense without a foundation of good schools and productive factories and world-class technology that is essential if America is to be No. 1 and stay No. 1 on the battlefield and in the workplace — a foundation solid enough to defend America and to make America grow; a foundation broad enough to protect our interest and to extend a helping hand to those who struggle for freedom and for opportunity around the world."

In addition to building a strong economic base and reducing the threat of nuclear war, Dukakis said the United States must strengthen its conventional forces and make the Pentagon more accountable.

The Massachusetts governor said weapons purchased by the Pentagon should be held to higher standards of performance and tighter security should be implemented to guard against fraud by defense contractors and consultants.

"We see billions being spent on ammunition and weapons that don't do what they are designed to do, and my friends, we see too many defense dollars slipping into the pockets of wheel-dealers and consultants," he said. "We've got to strengthen and modernize our conventional forces, and we've got to manage the Pentagon to get a dollar's worth of security for every defense dollar we spend."

Dukakis said American military forces have to be "strong enough

Eric Manuel denies allegation that he cheated on ACT

Associated Press

UK sophomore guard Eric Manuel yesterday denied that he cheated during an ACT exam at Lafayette High School.

In a prepared statement released through his attorney, Robert Stiltz Jr., Manuel said: "Prior to my arrival in Lexington, I prepared for the test with my counselor at Southwest High School in Macon, Ga. I did nothing improper before, during or after the ACT test. I have cooperated fully with the NCAA investigation and will have no further comment until after the investigation is complete."

Meanwhile, the student who sat next to Manuel during the June 1987 test told WKYT-TV that he didn't help Manuel cheat, but "it would have been easy for him to look off my paper."

Chris Shearer said students were seated at cafeteria tables that were divided into three sections, and that three students were seated in each section.

Shearer denied reports that he had bragged he helped Manuel pass the test. He also denied that Lafayette basketball coach Donnie Harville, who drove Manuel and teammate Sean Sutton to the test, sat Manuel down next to Shearer.

Shearer said he had not been interviewed by NCAA or UK investigators, but that his parents had. Attempts to contact the Shearers were not successful.

Manuel's ACT test is reportedly being investigated by the NCAA. The NCAA announced earlier this summer that it was launching a formal investigation into the UK basketball program after a newspaper reported that assistant coach Dwane Casey allegedly sent $1,000 to a recruit's father through the mail.

Stiltz said Manuel was interviewed by the NCAA in Lexington yesterday.

Basketball pays in more ways than one

Two brief character sketches:
A. Dr. X, occupation — professor.
We'll call him Joe to make him sound familiar.

Joe went to college at Cal Poly for his bachelor's degree in the mid-1970s — summa cum laude in physics. He then went on and got his master's and doctorate.

Today, Joe teaches physics at UK.

Last year, he only got a two-percent increase in pay, placing him still further behind what his colleagues at comparable schools make.

B. Dwane Casey, occupation — assistant basketball coach.

Dwane went to UK where he was a reserve and co-captain of the 1978 national basketball champions. After he got his bachelor's at UK in 1979, he was an assistant coach at Western Kentucky University.

Today, he coaches basketball at UK and could be a spokesman for Federal Express.

Emery was a bad trip.
Dwane just got a 10-percent increase in pay from $36,400 last year to $40,000 this year, according to a story in the Courier-Journal yesterday.

In terms of money, which seems to be the measuring rate of success these days, Casey and his sidekick, James Dickey, look like Einsteins compared to Joe, who spends his days laboring over formulas and glazy-eyed students — not sweat pants, and adoring fans.

I don't know, maybe I'm a little off. But isn't the one with the doctorate supposed to be getting the good raises, the fringe benefits.

Look at UK basketball coach Eddie Sutton. He made $84,334 last year. Poor Ed, that's only two percent more than he made last year. Of course that's not figuring in added inducements like the summer coaching camps and the NIKE shoe contract.

In doing stories last year on the state budget and how it was going to affect higher education, a professor told me that money was not the priority for teachers.

But, he told me, there comes a point when you see your salary falling so far behind that of your colleagues that it becomes a matter of pride — a feeling that you're not appreciated.

The idea that an assistant basketball coach can get a larger pay raise than a faculty member of this institution is ridiculous.

It gives yet another sad commentary on our priorities in this state where it is a virtual uphill struggle to raise our faculty salaries to the level of mediocrity, much less respectability.

I can hear Athletic Director Cliff Hagan yelling foul all the way from Memorial Coliseum.
Dickey's and Casey's pay raise only brought their salaries more in line with other assistant basketball coaches, Hagan told the Courier. Furthermore, no general University money is earmarked for the coaches' salaries.

According to the Courier's story, although individual salary increases may vary, the University of Louisville gives the same salary increases to everyone — coaches and university personnel alike.

It wouldn't seem that out of line for UK to be run the same way. The way we're doing things now, however, makes a serious statement about what our priorities are at this University.

When we reward somebody more for how they teach the dribble and jump hook than for preparing young minds for the future, we give more fodder for those critics who view UK as nothing more than a one-trick pony — where all we're known for is basketball, basketball, basketball.

TOLLY HO
395 S. Limestone
253-2007

If you've already managed to find this place after stumbling out of the University Club, then you already know what is meant by the term "Ho burger."

For the uninitiated, Tolly-Ho dishes out some of the best fast-order burgers around. $1.45 (10 cents more for cheese) gets you the basic Tolly Ho, which consists of a quarter-pound patty, lettuce, tomatoes, onions and Tolly-Ho's "special sauce."

Bigger appetites will probably be satiated with the Super Ho ($2.60), which is the same toppings, but with two large patties.

Any meal should be accompanied with a side order of hash browns (90 cents), which are even better when mixed with cheese.

As the restaurant is open 24 hours (except on Sundays), early morning stomach grumbings can be put to rest with breakfast plates that range from pancakes ($1.50) to an omelet with everything (3.75).

Oh, and if the food doesn't get you, the Thursday night, 25-cent beer will.

Dan Murphy (far right) and his band, Soul Asylum, will bring their version of the Minneapolis sound to Rhinestone's Monday. The group is touring to promote their new album, Hang Time.

Diverse Soul Asylum spends 'Hang Time' while on tour

By CHARLIE MCCUE
Contributing Writer

The Minneapolis quartet Soul Asylum are on a roll. They are currently on an extensive tour of the United States. And their album, Hang Time is receiving heavy airplay on college radio stations around the country.

The group consists of Dave Pirner on vocals and guitar, Dan Murphy also on vocals and guitar, Karl Meuller on bass and Grant Young on drums. They started out playing the Minneapolis club scene under the name Lead Foot Rules. At the time, the drummer for the band was Pat Morley, who later left the band and was replaced by Young. They didn't get their big start until a concert in Madison, Wis., when they were opening for the Replacements.

"The Replacements' manager, Peter Jefferson, was the head of the Twin Tone record label and he really liked us that night and he signed us to a record contract and we got picked up by A&M and here we are," said Murphy in a phone interview from Minneapolis.

Soul Asylum has been compared to an '80s punk version of The Who. "I guess anything is open for interpretation, but I see us mostly as a balls-out rock band," Murphy said.

At first the band was influenced by the punk rock movement with groups such as the Clash, the Sex Pistols and Generation X.

"We started out as a cover band. I guess our biggest influences are ourselves," Murphy said.

The band doesn't restrict itself selves to any certain musical styles.

"We'll play acoustic guitar if the song calls for it," Murphy said. "We put punk rock songs on the record for something to do. We've done everything except reggae, maybe that will be next."

On the song "Twiddly Dee" there is even a country influence.

"Country, to me is kind of neat because it's easy to understand what they're singing about," Murphy said.

The band is what one would consider a touring band.

Soul Asylum has supported Husker Du and X. The group is still touring.

"The Husker Du tour was a really good thing for us because it was our first tour that was more than a week long." It really tightened the band a lot. The thing with X was strange because they were booked at big theaters and they weren't selling any tickets.

Soul Asylum has toured the country several times and has toured Europe, including the Roskilde Festival in Denmark. The band mainly concentrates on the East and West coasts because of the bigger markets, Murphy said.

How has the audience response been on the tour? "Sometimes we'll play really crummy and we'll have a great crowd and they'll have a wonderful time," Murphy said. "Other times, we'll play great and the crowd will be kind of stiff. Generally, we'll have a good crowd."

Murphy said the band's musical topics stem from "personal observation."

"The songs really aren't that literal," he said. "Kind of one person's way of looking at the world."

Minneapolis has long been a starting point for groups such as the Replacements, Husker Du and Prince.

But somewhere in the midst of the band's extensive touring, the members lost identity with the city.

"...the last three years we've been on the road pretty extensively," Murphy said. "The music scene is kind of misunderstood also. There's a lot more going on than most people know about."

Despite Soul Asylum's past success, major success isn't the band's main goal.

"I want to see us develop musically," Murphy said. "I think every record is a little better than the previous one. As long as we keep on like that it's very rewarding for us. We don't really have any huge aspirations. We're doing the only thing we know how to do and that's being a rock band."

Soul Asylum will play at Rhinestone's at 8 p.m. Monday. Tickets are $5 in advance and $9 the day of show. Affghan Whigs will open.

Syncopated Inc. pushes for participation with its 'Free Day of Dance' tomorrow

By AMY MUDD
Contributing Writer

If you have ever wanted to learn the ancient art of belly dancing, or be on Club MTV, check out Syncopated Inc.'s "Free Day of Dance" tomorrow from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Syncopated Inc. is a community based, non-profit organization whose aim is to bring all cultures and ages of people together who would not normally interact.

The program Saturday will include a variety of dances; aerobics and yoga, Middle Eastern and African dances, modern, jazz, tap, dance for musical theater and street dancing. Classes are offered for all ages and levels of dancers.

Instructors will be on hand Saturday to demonstrate dances and answer questions.

"Even people who aren't interested in advanced dancing can take classes involving movement to music and working with their bodies," said Betty Bodenbush, Bodenbush, a junior at UK, is a member of the staff and teaches Creative Movement. "It's a good workout and great for stress release," she added.

Self expression is encouraged through movement at Syncopated Inc. Administrator John Rogers gave an overview of participation in the program as "involvement can be simply a fun way to get in shape or as involved as an internship."

Mertish Kruse, a senior physical therapy major at UK, teaches modern, aerobic and African classes at Syncopated. "I'd love to see more involvement from UK students, faculty, and staff," said Kruse. Syncopated Inc. is located on the third floor of ArtsPlace on 101 North Mill Street.

CHIMES OF FREEDOM
Bruce Springsteen
Columbia Records

By ROB SENG
Arts editor

It's no real surprise that Bruce Springsteen decided to join the Amnesty International Human Rights Concert Caravan and it should be no real surprise that Springsteen decided to do something more for the organization.

A slower, brooding reading of "Together Than The Rest" opens the disc and is followed by a rousing "Be True," an out-take from The River recording sessions.

Previously, the organization had used Bob Dylan's "I Shall Be Released" as its anthem and now Springsteen covers Dylan's "Chimes of Freedom" which features Roy Bittan's electric piano effectively ringing out the chimes.

The revamped, acoustic version of "Born To Run" closes out the E.P. Even without the spoken intro, the effect is the same — the narrator has finally realized that dreams can be had and the time has come to stop running. Too bad somebody didn't tell Julianne that.

Freddy Krueger's back, but this time only the special effects are better.

This sequel picks up with the three teenage survivors of the last Freddy-fest once again having weird dreams. Freddy picks them off one-by-one, but before the last gives her power to bring other people into her dreams to one of her friends.

The special effects are more imaginative in this movie — a girl has her arms ripped off and slowly turns into a cockroach (David Cronenberg would've loved that sequence) — but the "Elm Street" series is starting to become formulaic.

A Nightmare On Elm Street IV: The Dream Master, rated "R," is playing at North Park and South Park cinemas.

Operation Read to have program to help UK employees improve their reading skills

By CHERYL WALDRIP
Contributing Writer

Operation Read will begin a tutor training workshop later this month and is looking for people to help UK employees improve their reading skills.

Connie Johnson, Operation Read coordinator, said when she looks for a tutor she wants "someone who is very caring. I feel like that's the most important quality. They need to be willing to take the amount of time that's needed."

Operation Read is a program that pairs UK employees who want help with reading skills or trying to

"I feel like that's the most important quality. (The tutors) need to be willing to take the amount of time that's needed."

Connie Johnson,

achieve a General Education Development certificate with other University employees serving as tutors.

Tutors spend about three hours a week tutoring, Johnson said. It takes about an hour to prepare for class, which meets twice a week. Tutors and students are given paid release time from their UK jobs to participate in the program.

"Since the program's beginning in 1986, there have been 32 employees who have come to the program," Johnson said. "Now we have about 30 employees who are actively going to sessions."

People volunteer for a variety of reasons, Johnson said.

"I've heard some tutors say they've had a chance to learn and they're real thankful for that," Johnson said. "They want to help give something back. . . . Once they get into the program they see how many things a reader takes for granted."

The tutor training workshop, which is provided by the Fayette County Operation Read program, will be held Sept. 22, 29, and 30, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The 16-hour workshop includes the best components of tutor training offered by Literacy Volunteers of America and Laubach Literacy Action, covering everything from teaching materials to what to expect as a tutor.

Tutors completing the workshop will be certified as Literacy Volunteers of America, Inc. tutors.

Each tutor is paired with one student and the tutor has a lot of flexibility in tailoring lessons to their student's needs.

Some students want to learn to read the Bible or newspapers. Others want to decipher their bills and other mail. Tutors are free to use these reading materials during lessons.

For further information or to enroll in the workshop, call Operation Read at 257-6331.

Van Horn deserves full support from UK students at fight

The UK student body should support fellow student and professional boxer Darrin Van Horn in his Sept. 20 fight at Memorial Coliseum.

On that date Van Horn will fight Jake Torrence of Chicago at 7:30 p.m. in a junior middleweight bout.

The admission price for UK students with a valid ID card will be $3. That's a small price to pay, especially since Van Horn doesn't even need to fight at the Coliseum — this is a fight for the fans.

If we can put thousands of students in Rupp Arena and thousands more in Commonwealth Stadium, surely we can get 4,000 people into the Coliseum to witness a professional boxing match — featuring an undefeated and No. 1 ranked contender.

Alex MONTGOMERY

Four thousand people. A mere 18 percent of the UK campus enrollment. That's not even taking into account the crowd expected from Lexington and the Central Kentucky area.

But that's the number needed, according to boxing promoter Cedric Kushner, for Lexington to play host to a world title fight in December.

That scenario hinges, in part, on the turnout Sept. 20.

So you don't like boxing. Why should you go? Personally speaking, I'm not a big fan either.

But I am a fan of Darrin Van Horn.

He deserves the support. Consider: In 36 professional fights he is undefeated, winning 23 by knockout. He is ranked in the top five in all three boxing organizations — the WBA, the World Boxing Council and the International Boxing Federation.

In addition to all the boxing accomplishments, Van Horn is an upstanding individual in a sport known for its sleaze and corruption. He's a rarity.

Van Horn doesn't have to fight on campus. He wants to. He gets no support or assistance from the University.

The Van Horn camp is making a sacrifice to fight in the Coliseum.

Budweiser, one of boxing's biggest sponsors, will be a sponsor of the Sept. 20 bout, according to Kushner. This is a major concession since, according to University regulations, alcohol cannot be sold on campus.

If Van Horn wanted the quick money he could find it much easier in the boxing hotbeds of Las Vegas or Atlantic City than he could in Lexington.

And for a while he went that route.

Earlier this year G.L. Van Horn, Darrin's father and trainer, moved his boxing operation from the Continental Inn in Lexington to Atlantic City.

But now he's back, ready to give it another shot in Kentucky. Van Horn has fought in the state before but has never drawn much more than 2,000 people.

The Van Horn camp is optimistic that all that will change Sept. 20. Like Van Horn said earlier this week: "Three bucks isn't going to break anybody."

No it isn't. Even if you don't like boxing.

Dukakis calls for stronger defense in speech at Louisville convince any potential adversary that they have nothing to gain and everything to lose by attacking the United States or our allies or our friends."

Appealing to the audience of mostly military veterans, Dukakis said the federal government needs to improve and expand on the services offered to veterans.

Criticizing the Reagan administration for cutting many of those services and closing Veterans Administration offices across the country, the governor was greeted with a round of applause.

There's "something wrong when veterans, who should be our most honored citizens, don't receive the respect and the dignity that they've earned," he said.

The governor said Vice President Bush had his priorities misplaced when he advocated a $28 billion tax break to Americans earning more than $200,000 a year.

He also chastised the Vice President for casting the deciding vote in the Senate to cut Veterans Administration health-care benefits by $2 billion and to eliminate the cost-of-living increase for disabled veterans.

"What kind of priorities are those?" he asked. "A tax cut for those who have it made; a cut in income for those who lost a leg at Normandy or were blinded at Inchon or had an arm torn off at Khe Sanh."

At a press conference following his speech, Dukakis, who has been critical of the Reagan administration's Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known as "Star Wars," said he was not opposed to re-searching the program, but said he would not be willing to spend more than $1 billion on it.

He even went as far to say he would be in favor of deploying the defense system if he could be sure it would work and was in the national interest of the United States.

Later, when asked if he had changed his tune on the program, Dukakis said he still opposed deploying SDI because it would violate the 1972 Antiballistic Missile Treaty signed by the United States and the Soviet Union.

"It is in our best interest to obey that treaty and I think it is in the best interest of the Soviet Union to observe that treaty and slow down the arms race," he said.

Legionnaires split over candidates

By C.A. DUANE BONIFER
Editorial Director

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — As the 70th national American Legion convention concluded here this week, members gave both presidential candidates high marks for addressing issues important to veterans, but neither candidate seemed to emerge as an overwhelming favorite among legionnaires spoken to.

"They both brought up things the vets wanted to hear," said Virginia Edwards of Reno, Nevada, who is the department commander of the Nevada American Legions. "Personally, I haven't decided who I'll vote for. I'm a Democrat, but that doesn't mean I'll vote for a Democrat, but that doesn't mean I'll vote for a Republican."

"A lot of (legionnaires) have an open mind and they don't know which way they are going to swing," Edwards said.

Members spoken to were especially impressed with Democratic Presidential candidate Michael Dukakis's speech yesterday morning that they said reflected a tough stand on defense and concern with veterans-related issues.

Several members also were surprised by the positive reception Dukakis received after Democratic Arizona Sen. Dennis DeConcini was heckled when he criticized the Reagan administration an praised Dukakis on Wednesday afternoon.

"I didn't expect him to be so warmly received," said Oliver Alston of Los Angeles.

"I thought Michael Dukakis done a helluva job," said one American Legion member from Bayport, Minn., who declined to be interviewed. The man, who said he is a Democrat, said, "I was surprised by the reception he got when the candidate Reagan came in on the ball."

Tuesday night, President Reagan spoke to about 7,500 legionnaires at the Convention Center. The speech was designed to give Vice President George Bush a boost the day before his speech to the convention and portray Dukakis as a soft-on-defense Northeastern liberal.

The strategy did not work, however, because many legionnaires who attended both speeches said they already knew Bush was strong on defense, but they had not expected the Massachusetts governor to present a strong military message.

Dukakis "was more prepared and seemed to understand things better," said M.V. Serranilla of Scarborough, Canada. "He appears to be for the strength and improvement of the armed forces."

Although the American Legion — which is a largely conservative, pro-defense organization that has been one of President Reagan's strongest supporters — does not endorse a political candidate, its three million members have more than a 90-percent voting record.

Both candidates were received positively for their plans to help military veterans, including the establishment of a cabinet-level position for the Veterans Administration, continued commitment to bring home soldiers missing in action from the Korean and Vietnam wars, and an improved health-care system for military veterans.

The message struck a chord with many, however, some thought the candidates may have been pandering to the undecided voters, rather than interested in helping veterans.

"It's like all politicians, they say what we want to hear," said Tillson L. Gorsuch of Longmont, Colo.

"They were both good speeches. They obviously did their homework. They told us what we wanted to hear," said Tim Dour of Cincinnati. "Now it's a question of what's going to come out and what the real issues are."

Some of the legionnaires were critical of the barbs the two candidates exchanged during their speeches.

"Bush attacked Dukakis in a sly way," said George Alexander of New York County, N.Y. "I didn't think that was needed in a place like this. You should keep that on the campaign trail, not here."

Rep. tells students UK a priority

from attending colleges and universities," Scorsone said. "We've got to make it a high priority to keep those tuition costs down."

Scorsone pointed to his work in the 1988 General Assembly for more funding for higher education.

Gov. Wallace Wilkinson's executive budget had called for virtually no funding increase for higher education this year, and only a five-percent increase next year.

Scorsone said he helped to change that, securing more money for buildings, and a modest faculty salary increase.

"That took some wrangling with the governor," Scorsone said, "but on some key issues you have to stand firm and you have to be willing to fight for your district. And this is what I've done for the 75th district."

Although Scorsone beat his current opponent, Republican Al Arbogast, in 1984 by a 67-to-32 percent margin. Scorsone lost to Arbogast in the Towers precinct, which includes most of the UK campus.

To help Scorsone on campus, Lisa Young, UK chairman of Scorsone's campaign, said she would disseminate the campaign literature.

Young, a political science senior, said she plans Scorsone's continued support for higher education and "his efforts to get more money for the University in the budget."

And Si Deane, senior vice president for College Democrats, said things will be different this time around in the Towers district.

"We'll use all of our student support ... to combat that," Deane said. "And we will carry the Towers District this time."

Fake ID found on accident victim

"She was not breathing or conscious but she had a weak pulse," Castle said.

Castle said that, with the help of other witnesses, she moved Whalen out of the car and continued to give her mouth-to-mouth resuscitation until an ambulance arrived.

"My first reaction was to get to the scene and help as much as I could," Castle said.

Shipman pleaded not guilty to charges of driving under the influence yesterday afternoon in Lexington-Fayette Urban County District Court, according to the clerk. Further hearings are set for Sept. 28.

Whalen was a member of Delta Gamma sorority, Alpha Epsilon Delta and was a Links Junior Honorary. She was a 1986 graduate of Notre Dame Academy in Covington.

Funeral services will be held at 10 p.m. Saturday at St. Pius X Church in Edgewood, Ky.
