What Size College Best Serves Pupils?

At what point does a college or university become so large that the quality of its teaching suffers? At what point does its size become so large that the individual student becomes lost in the mass? Can higher education adopt its process to mass production to meet the demands forced upon it by the swelling numbers of students without suffering the consequences?

In their answers to these similar questions educators have differed widely in the past decade. There are those who hold that the large college or university inevitably loses the personal touch with the individual student, whose educational opportunities are thereby lessened by just so much. This argument has been capitalized by the smaller colleges. There are others who are equally convinced that the student need not lack for individual attention in the big university, and the fact that he is only one among thousands is outweighed by the wider variety of educational facilities at his disposal.

From the experience of having to deal with some four or five thousand students annually, President George W. Rightmire of Ohio State University is convinced that a large university can be administered so as to retain the personal touch and to maintain high standards of education. But he makes it plain, it is a task that requires sustained enthusiasm and effort. As a matter of fact, there does not seem to be any choice in the matter, for most of the small colleges have about all the students they can conveniently handle, while the swollen enrollments at the big universities continue to grow. The problem of their administration and operation is there to be solved willy nilly—Ohio State Journal.

Effects of Cod-Liver Oil Studied

Physiology Department Experiments With Vitamins D and E

The Physiology department, under the direction of Dr. Allen, is conducting a series of very interesting experiments with cod-liver oil and vitamins D and E. The research is a check up on material that has been uncovered in the medical world in the past year, but the department here believes that they will be able to make several important additions to the material. The students can conveniently handle, while the swollen enrollments at the big universities continue to grow. The problem of their administration and operation is there to be solved willy nilly—Ohio State Journal.

Dr. Allen said that although he was unable to make a complete statement at the present time he feels that some valuable material will be brought to light as a result of the experiments.

Education from the kindergarten to the highest academic degree, that of doctor or philosophy will be available at the University, when the new education training building now under construction is completed, Dean W. S. Taylor, of the College of Education, announced Saturday.

The new building, facing the University Administration building near the intersection of south Upper and Limestone streets, will be completed and ready for occupancy by Aug. 1, according to the latest report received by Dean Taylor.

The University will be one of the few institutions in the entire country and the only one within an area of several hundred miles to offer such complete educational training. When the new building is completed, a child can enter the University at the kindergarten age and continue its education through graded school, high school, college and post graduate study to master's and doctor's degrees.

Watering 8,000 Horses

On Horseshoe Lake near Oklahoma City, in a businesslike, compact building, 87,000 horses (figuratively speaking) are stabled... nearly three for every family in Oklahoma City. For with the completion of a new unit of the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Company's power station at this point, the total generating capacity was raised from 46,930 to 87,130 horsepower.

To keep these "horses" up to full working condition, and do it cheaply as possible, is no small job. Just the water required is 86,400,000 gallons daily, the equivalent of eight days' supply for Oklahoma City.

The new generating unit was made necessary by the expansion of industrial activity throughout Oklahoma and particularly by the increased use of electric power by the oil industry. For it, improved valves, fittings, and piping, so vital to efficient and economical power production, were supplied by Crane Co. Thus in these modern times does progress in one industry bring progress in another.

No matter what branch of engineering you enter after graduation, you are likely to find Crane piping materials essential tools of your profession. In the Crane book, "Pioneering in Science," is told the story of Crane research in metallurgy, with important scientific data and high pressure and temperature curves. A copy will be valuable for reference. Let us send you one.

English Grad. More Mature Product

A prominent New York newspaper hazarded the other day the opinion that the average English university graduate is a more mature product than the graduate of a university on this side of the Atlantic. By mature, we presume, it meant that he was more fully developed intellectually, better fitted to carry on his life work, or that there would be to admit that we are poorer material, less able to benefit by a college training, or that there is some defect in the typical North American university.

It is our belief that the newspaper mentioned is quite correct in making this statement, and the fault lies mostly in the fact that the average American undergraduate (we use "American" here in its broad sense) is less intellectually mature than his English confrere. But we must add to this statement a qualification. The advantage lies with the latter because he is subject to greater selection.

What we mean to express is that in the British Isles there are a smaller number of universities, students per capita of population than there are in America. Over here, we have a million or more college men and women. Particularly in the United States do we find in almost every city a college of some kind granting degrees. There are State universities which take care of the vast number of students. A college education has become a popular matter.

In England, on the other hand, university education is, comparatively speaking, reserved for a few. By necessity those who do go up to the university are more highly selected, are better intellectual material, and hence, when they graduate, we suppose, somewhat more mature than is the average college student here.

It must be remembered, however, that in speaking of this matter we are speaking of the average university graduate. This cannot be too highly emphasized.—The Tech.

SALE OF BOOKS AT END OF TERM IS DISCOURAGED

Do college students sell their textbooks? This is a timely question concerning an unfortunate custom which seizes many undergraduates in January and June. Thomas Arkie Clark, Dean of Men of the University of Illinois, gives two reasons for these seasonal outbreaks, first the student's indifference or lack of interest in his work, and second, his need to get out of a financial difficulty. Dean Clark's further statement that "a college student is always broke" and "anything that will immediately add to his bank account seems to him justifiable" will not be challenged.

But immediate cash is always forthcoming from the sale of textbooks, and the sums obtained are negligible in comparison with the value of the books. The rush to dispose of textbooks at less than their real value is swelled by the thought that now, examinations being over, those old books "will never be needed again." Perhaps they'll not be needed for classroom work, but how often graduates mean that they wish they had kept their textbooks, to brush up on a language, to find a certain formula, to locate that line of poetry? The reasons for missing books hastily disposed of are many, but the regret is recurrent that the books are gone, with all the precious notes that added value to them, at least in sentiment.

Again, where will you ever get authorized authorities so economically? The truth is that once you have sold a textbook, you will never replace it, you will even tramp to a library for the required information. Which is not quite as clever as keeping the books in the first place, but is a technical career. In general, reference library that may save time and money for you in the future.

It is a recognized fact that textbooks on technical or professional subjects constitute the basis of a professional library. In many cases these professional books are very expensive, and to resell them at the popular low rates would not augur well for a technical career. In general, textbooks formats are becoming more attractive yearly, and do not detract in the least from the charm of well filled bookcases.

Who would have a library composed only of novels? A choice as limited as that would indicate an uninteresting owner; even a calculus textbook on your bookshelves would catch the eye and hint of a many sided character!

These are points in passing, for consensus of opinion suggests that you keep your textbooks for sentimental reasons. President John Gier Hibben, of Princeton University, suggests that undergraduates leaving college should take their textbooks with him as a reminder and record of a past chapter in his life and as a nucleus of a library. Perhaps it isn't fashionable to be sentimental. Yet books have become a recognized budget item; and now in many colleges is heard the cry of "Keep Your Textbooks." There is no library or reference book as handy as the worn and scribbled textbook, which has been your companion, on and off campus. Can you think of anything which would be as graphic a commentary on your college life as the notes and names you have jotted on the margins and covers of these books? To what other books have you granted such intimacy of thought? Proves!

Joseph H. Pennington, of the University of Pennsylvania, follows this thought with his remark, "I know of no book that can be more properly valued as an 'association book' than the textbook which represents many hours of work and brings to mind some teacher of the past."

COAL IS KING IN OLD KENTUCKY

Brings Nearly $200,000,000 Annually Into State Including Freight and Industrial Revenue

If the possibility should arise whereby Kentucky might get a new industry which would bring one hundred million dollars of new money into the state annually, sixty-five million dollars of which would be paid out as wages to sixty thousand workers and the balance largely go to buying supplies and services, this industry to create another hundred million dollars in value, freight and industrial revenue, require sixty thousand railroad and industrial workers, doubtless the officials of this new industry would be received with open arms, the entire people of the state, newspapers, city, county, and state officials, and statesmen, would doubtless join in assuring the newcomers that every possible aid would be given them in establishing the business on a paying basis, the Legislature might pass friendly laws, exempting from city and state taxes might be extended, and the event hailed as the greatest single industry development in the history of the state.

Last year the coal sales of Kentucky brought right at one hundred million dollars in new money into the state, and whether or not the operators make a single dollar profit in any one year they continue to bring in, year after year, one hundred million dollars in new money into Kentucky. The value of coal mining is the king industry of Kentucky. The value of coal produced in 1928 in Kentucky was $86,722,000, all of which coal, except about five per cent, was shipped out of the state and this stream of black coal sent out of the state brought a golden stream which ultimately reached every county in the state. The value of coal produced in Kentucky is more than twice the value of all other minerals combined produced in Kentucky. Coal is by far the greatest single wealth producer in Kentucky, for Kentucky.

Just about two thirds of all moneys received by coal in this state, instead of paid out, in fact, before the operator receives his cash, are turned over to the state. These moneys turn over to the state for mine stores and independent stores of about thirty million dollars. It is a well known fact that it is not uncommon for coal operators to make only the slightest margin of profit on their entire sales, sometimes no profit in a single year, so that the difference between mine wages and total receipts goes to the state for mine supplies and various services of every description. In other words, mine owners create an annual thirty million dollar mine supply and service business.

As it is usually said that the coal industry of Kentucky are inexhaustible, they certainly are for several generations, this industry does not noticeably decrease the latent wealth of Kentucky, and, any way, a dollar or two in a Kentucky bank or in circulation is certainly worth more than a ton of coal in the ground where it is worth nothing to anybody.

Based on the usual U. S. statistics, this industry created about one hundred million dollars in freight revenue for the L. & N. & O., Southern, Illinois Central and other coal carrying roads. One operator estimates that the coal industry supplied the L. & N. with ninety per cent of the tonnage and revenue of all shipments originating in Kentucky. This per cent will also probably apply to the C. & O., and in less but substantial extent to the Illinois Central and Southern, while all of these roads make heavy shipments of supplies to the coal fields in 128 Eastern Kentucky, with a few counties in Tennessee and Kentucky, produced $37,500,000 coal freight for the L. & N. which business was cleared through Louisville banks. It has been said that the L. & N. made Louisville, and is still making it. Coal largely makes the L. & N., therefore coal largely makes Louisville. Likewise coal largely makes Ashland, Lexington, and many other towns.

The coal industry gave employment to nearly sixty thousand mine workers. If the figures could be secured, they would doubtless show that fully as many men were employed by the railroads of Kentucky to move Kentucky-produced coal, and for building and maintaining coal equipment and other services necessary to handle the coal movement.

The total sales of Kentucky Burley tobacco reported for the past season was seventy three million dollars, thus coal sales were about forty per cent greater than Burley sales. The total value of all Kentucky farm products we have seen estimated at two hundred million dollars, so the "coal crop" was almost equal to all farm crops outside of tobacco. Furthermore, as little is grown in the mining fields, they drew enormous supplies from Kentucky farms.

The latest industrial census, U. S. gave four hundred fifty-three million dollars as the total value of all manufactured products in Kentucky, but this included $85,000,000 of unclassified industries. Thus it will be seen that coal produced was more than one fourth in value of all classified manufacture daries. It is notable that car and general construction and repair of steam railroads accounted for the largest single manufacturing industry, that six million dollars, for which coal equipment was doubtless largely responsible. Next in importance in manufacture was iron and steel, nearly thirty-six million dollars in value, doubtless much of this went into coal equipment.

Kentucky is making a determined effort to bring new industries into the state. It is well known that new industries go more quickly where old ones are given proper consideration. There is an old saying that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. For the above, and other reasons, would it not be well for all Kentucky to take a keen, friendly interest in the double hundred million dollar coal industry which it already has in hand?—Appalachian Journal.

Y.M.C.A. Holds Meet In Men's Dormitory

Students Hear The Rev. Harry J. Berry at Regular Weekly Session

The Rev. Harry J. Berry, of the Victory Christian church, addressed the regular weekly meeting of the Y. M. C. A. in the assembly room of the Men's Dormitory last night. The Rev. Berry displayed extensive knowledge of college life and the necessity for spiritual advice.

Norton Walker, vice-president of the Y. M. C. A. Cabinet, introduced the speaker and had charge of the meeting. The meeting next week is to be in charge of the Y. W. C. A. girls. This meeting is sponsored once each year by the Y. W. C. A. in cooperation with the Y. M. C. A. Miss Margaret Lewis will be in charge of the meeting.

Dr. Frank L. McVey Speaks on London Naval Conference

The naval conference now meeting in London was the subject of President Frank L. McVey's talk before the meeting of the Kiwanis Club at the Lafayette hotel this week. The title of the discussion was "Implications of the London Conference." Dr. McVey explained in detail the comparative views toward naval armament and its influence on the peace of the world as taken by England, the United States, Italy, Japan, and France.

The conference is an important adjunct without accomplishing something; it is too important, too significant, according to the speaker, who commented on President Hoover's attitude toward the peace problem which is very cooperative. "If we want peace we must cause the forces that are at work in the world to look to peace," Dr. McVey declared.

The Strand will open "Hit the Deck" tomorrow night with a 10:15 preview and both feature films. This is a Radio picture and was directed by Luther Reed, the man who made the "Hit the Deck" picture. The picture is adapted from the opera of the same name which enjoyed tremendous success in the large cities. Jack Oakie is featured in the production with Polly Walker. The famous song hits, "Hallelujah" and "Sometimes I'm Happy" are heard in the picture, which has received favorable notices from the principal critics of the cinema.

—TLR—
The incidental music contributed greatly to the absurdity of "East Lynne" and the audience appreciated the humor in the picture. However, the malice of Warner Brothers talking pictures are accompanied with little saving grace. The picture is without so much as a snicker.

—TLR—
"Sally," the first National picture taken from the musical comedy of the same name, will open at the Kentucky tomorrow. Marilyn Miller, the original Sally, is starred in the picture and Joe E. Brown has the role of the exiled duke which was created on the stage by Leon Errol. "Sally" is filmed in color and some of the settings, especially the sunken garden, are said to be particularly eye-filling. As in all musicals the story is unimportant. Marilyn Miller alone would make "Sally" worth seeing.

The local national this week featured pictures in which women enacted unimportant parts. "The Bishop Murder Case," "Hit the Deck," and "Sally" we have the names glorified which is at least as refreshingly original yet more appealing to those of us with the proverbial roving eye of masculinity.

—TLR—
Sunday will mark the opening of "The Bishop Murder Case" at the Ben Ali theater. This is the third S. S. Van Dine mystery story to reach the talking screen. The other two were made by Paramount but Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer bought the rights to this one and cast the famous role of Philo Vance to Bar Rathbone who made such a sterling appearance in "The Second Mrs. Cheney." William Powell enacted the flawless detective in "The Canary Murder Case" and "The Greene Murder Case." The new thriller tells of a daring murderer who marks his victims with a black bishop, a character in chess. Leila Hyams and Alec B. Francis are in the cast of "The Bishop Murder Case" which was directed by Nick Grinde.

WHAT YOUNGER COLLEGE MEN ARE DOING WITH WESTINGHOUSE A shakedown test, a rescue, and a hundred thrills SCORE of carefree Coast Guard sailors, and with them a Westinghouse man from the Boston Office, headed in a "bum boat" for the cutter Chelan peacefully at anchor in the harbor of Hamilton, Bermuda Islands. It had been an exciting shakedown test-cruise. The Westinghouse turbine generator, motor and condensers had functioned perfectly, the sea had yielded up its bag of tricks, the Bermudas had fascinated every soul. And soon they would be bound for home. But fate held new experiences in store. Five hundred miles off the Azores, the Newport, New York State training ship, had lost her propeller. The Chelan was called to the rescue. And with her, of course, went the Westinghouse man. BASEBALL PRACTICE OPENS ON MARCH 3

HARD SCHEDULE CONFRONTS NINE

Coch Devereux Schedules Ten Games for Wildcat Team; Four Stars Lost From Squad

By ELBERT McDONALD

Coch "Pat" Devereux has set March 3 as a date for the initial practice program for aspirants for positions on the University of Kentucky baseball team for the coming season. The Wildcat nine will engage in one of the hardest schedules ever to face the wearers of the Blue and White.

Four familiar faces will be lost from the lineup when Coch Devereux's flightin' Wildcats take the field against the representatives of the Miami University of Oxford, Ohio. The game will be played in the baseball addition to Stoll Field on March 31. The missing faces that have contributed so much to the success of the Wildcat baseball teams for the past three years are Glib, Covington, Laysman, and Cole. Coch Devereux admits that it is going to be hard to replace such sterling performers, but hopes that the few additions from last year's freshman team will help to solve the problem of the infield gap left by graduation. However, every place on the team will be in open competition, not only until the opening game, but throughout the rest of the season, and many of the positions are expected to be bitterly contested.

Although the schedule will be one of the hardest ever attempted by a U. of K. team in this sport, many of the fans and boosters are already voicing their faith and belief that Coch Devereux will turn out a team this year that will be better than the one last year that only lost one game. The Wildcats probably will not make a bid for Southern Conference honors this year as only one Conference foe has been scheduled at this date—Vanderbilt. However, according to S. A. "Daddy" Bolen, athletic director, there is a possibility that the Volunteers of Tennessee will be added to the Cat schedule for two games later in the season. The difficulty in the way of a meeting between the Wildcats and the respected foes from down Knoxville way, is that the Volunteers are just at present without a team as far as baseball is concerned. They are having to make their schedule so that it will not conflict with the Knoxville franchise of the Appalachian League who's park is the only one available for use by the University of Tennessee just at present. If, however, the dates can be satisfactorily arranged, the Cats and Volunteers will meet again before their annual Thanksgiving festival next fall.

Due to the break in athletic relations with Centre, and the dropping of baseball as a sport at the University of Louisville, the Cats will not meet any Kentucky teams during the coming season. The Big Ten conference has always furnished the most interesting games of the baseball schedule, and the approaching season will be no exception when The Big Blue tangles with Ohio State, and The University of Illinois.

Illinois will be met only once during the season and that on April 21, here. Ohio State will be met four times by the Cats. The first two games are scheduled for April 4 and 5, and will be played on Stoll Field, while the other games will be played in Columbus, April 14 and 15.

At present only 10 games comprise the Blue and White schedule, but it is expected that besides the two games pending with Tennessee, two games will be added to take the place vacated by Centre to bring the total to 15 games.

The schedule is as follows: March 31—Miami, here. April 4 and 5—Ohio, here. April 14 and 15—Illinois, here. April 21 and 22—Vanderbilt, here. April 29—Miami, there. May 30—Cincinnati, there. May 12—Cincinnati, here.

BASKETBALL

AS SEEN FROM THE SIDELINES

By JOHN MAUER UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY COACH

VII. Defensive Organization

Defensive play is practically as important as offensive play. The ratio a coach tries to maintain is about 60 per cent offense and 40 per cent defense. However, when the coach is presented with a poor offensive team he may reverse this ratio and have primarily a defensive team.

Good defensive play depends upon every man being well coached in individual defensive tactics. This includes the knowledge of the correct defensive stance and the ability to properly execute the three cardinal principals of defensive play. The defensive stance is taken with the feet well apart, the weight evenly distributed on both feet, arms sideward, head up and the weight of the body kept low. The feet are not lifted from the floor but are moved by sliding them along the surface. If the guard advances he moves one foot forward at a time by the use of short glides so as to not expose himself to a quick pivot and dribble by the defensive man.

The three cardinal principals to be remembered by all defensive men are as follows: First, never cross your legs while on defense. If you desire to change directions merely use one foot as a pivot foot and place the other forward or backward in the direction you wish to move. This prevents the offensive man from changing direction suddenly by making it necessary for the defensive man to untangle his legs before he can recover and pick up the ball, which is covering. Secondly, always stay between the man you are covering and the basket. This usually occurs in the opponent's offensive half of the floor because there is very little danger of the offensive team making any attempt to score from territory beyond this point. Some teams have their forwards try to recover the ball further down the floor but this can be easily hand-led and is poor theory. Such tactics spread your defense over too great an area and make it possible for the offense to score easily. In the second phase of the defensive play looks over one should as he is running back to his defensive position. This makes it possible for him to see the ball and to intercept any quick pass the offense may attempt. Getting to their positions hurriedly allows the defense to get a much needed rest as the offense is formed. The third phase rests in the players being so arranged that they are in good when the ball is recovered from the position for the offensive break. It also makes it possible for a shift to take place between the front and rear lines if one of the offensive men should evade his guard and get free for a shot at the basket. In the fourth phase it is essential that the front line, located at the middle of the floor, should not retreat too far. This would bring the defense within shooting distance and make it impossible for any quick shifts to take place between the two lines of defense. Constant talk between the guard and the front line is essential if the quick shifts necessary are to be executed. The fifth phase occurs with the placing of the men in a position that will permit them to break in the proper sequence when they recover the ball. This places the guards at either side of the basket and about three feet from the end line. The center is located at the foul circle and the forwards at either side of him.

Law Fraternities Announce Pledges For Second Term

Phi Delta Phi and Phi Alpha Delta, honorary law fraternities, have recently pledged several new members to their folds. These legal orders require a high scholastic standing and a marked ability in law for membership.

Phi Delta Phi pledged the following students at a banquet held recently in the Lafayette hotel: E. C. Bagwell, Hugh Broadhurst, Charles Sommers, and Joe Cleveland.

Dr. Frank Randall, professor in the College of Law, gave a short talk at this banquet on the value of belonging to an honorary fraternity and the good obtained from one in after life.

Phi Alpha Delta, announces the pledging of the following men since the second semester started: G. E. Finley, N. E. Frye, Harry V. McClesney, Jr., Kenton M. Prichard, and Will Rogers. Active members of Phi Alpha Delta are: Dan Griffith, Carol Byron, William H. Ceell, James Finley, Gayle Mohney, Elliot McWhorter, Hubert Willis, Thomas D. Theobald, Jesse K. Lewis, and Malcolm Wallace. Messrs. Willis, Theobald, Wallace, William Gess, and C. E. Barnes have recently been added to the staff of the Kentucky Law Journal. TIME—THAT TOUGH OLD TESTER....

Meet Time, that tough old tester of everything in this world. To his aid, Time calls all the destructive forces of the universe. Years come and go, storms and sunshine, heat and cold make their accustomed rounds, while Time, the tough old tester, broods over the world, trying, testing, destroying.

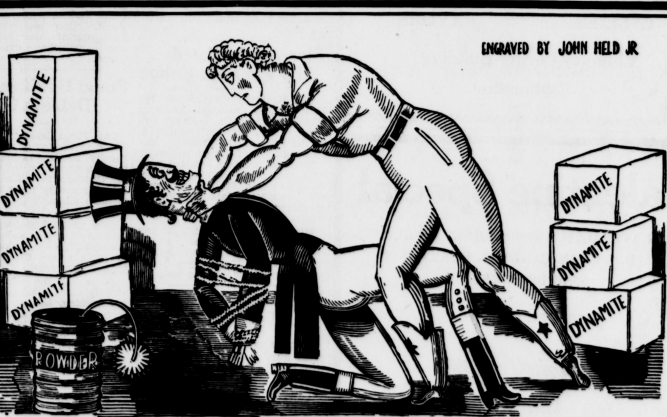

Yet Time, the tough old tester, does have his troubles. Against one material devised by man, Time and his serving-men falter. That material is genuine Puddled Wrought Iron—the metal of which Reading 5-Point Pipe is made. Watch for the next coming of Time, the tough old tester—you can learn about pipe from him.
