CHRISTMAS

The herald angels sing, Glory to the new-born King! And the wise men foretell His coming, And they scanned the heavens for a guide to lead them to His side, the Son of God, the savior of men. Gently, softly the Maker moved His hand.

And lo! From out the peaceful balm of night the mid-beford a star, and in its glorious beauty they recognized the work of God. Straightway then did they ride out across the fields, following along the path of the celestial body, until, at last, it rested over a sleeping hamlet, Bethlehem, in Judea.

For in Bethlehem Joseph and Mary of Nazareth sought shelter. And it was the virgin Mary who was chosen to bear the Christ-child, conceived of and made in the image of the Holy Ghost.

Travel weary and sore of body, the newly-united man and wife searched for lodging. But nowhere in the village could they find housing for the night, save in a miserable little manger. And there it was that Jesus Christ, the earthly son of God, was born.

To Joseph there appeared in a dream the angel of the Lord and bade him flee into Egypt, lest King Herod discover and slay the child. Thereupon, Joseph and Mary departed hurriedly from Bethlehem with Jesus, going to Egypt where they lived until Herod's death. It was in Nazareth that Jesus grew to manhood.

Two thousand years have since gone by; war, pestilence, culture, machinery, wealth, power, speed, education—all have united in bringing about cataclysmic, gigantic changes spanning the world.

We are born, we live, we die; ere long we are forgotten. Such is the fate of mortal man. Our memory may linger long in the hearts of friends and loved ones; our deeds may be extolled through generations; our names may be written in the book of time. Still, we are not destined for immortality.

Jesus Christ, the carpenter of Nazareth, is yet alive. Each day are we conscious of His presence. He stands beside us, and gives counsel. Even as when He, too, was of this earth, He now succors the distressed, comfort the weary of heart, and protect the oppressed. His teachings are spread throughout the world; His name is everlasting.

Today, Christmas, we commemorate the date of His birth. Oh, Son of God, Ruler of Destinies, would that we might know Thee better, and draw closer to Thee now, Christ, our Savior and Redeemer, we beseech Thy aid on this, the day of Thy nativity.

POLL QUESTIONS

Do you believe that the United States can stay out of another great war?

If the borders of the United States were invaded, would you bear arms in defense of your country?

Would you bear arms for the United States in the invasion of the borders of another country?

Do you believe that a national policy of an American navy and air force second to none will ensure us against the possibilities of another great war?

Do you favor governmental control of armament and munition industries?

Do you approve of the conscription of capital in time of war, just as has been our historic procedure in drafting man-power in time of war?

Do you think that, in the pursuit of the stabilization of Peace, it would be a wise policy for the United States to enter the League of Nations?

These are the questions the Literary Digest and the Association of College Editors will ask thousands of college men and women within the next month in obtaining a cross-section of student opinion regarding war and peace.

The University has been selected as one of the 150 colleges and universities throughout the country whose students will be sent ballots containing the above questions.

The answers to the questions require considerable thinking. Questions have been discussed individually in issues of The Kernel.

It is the hope of the thousands who will wait anxiously for the results which will be published weekly in The Digest that the students give their honest opinion; that they have given their answers due deliberation; that they truly show themselves to be the future leaders, who in the next few years will have to answer them for the masses of college students who may likewise be faced with the reality of war.

Discuss the questions in classes, with your fellow students, and during the Christmas holidays with your family, and be prepared for the ballots which will be mailed during the first week of January.

HITTING THE BALL

With the Christmas holidays and their joyous expectations of festivity and gaiety, students are likely to forget that the end of the semester and final examinations are so close at hand, why not make a final effort before going home get up as much back work as possible?

Despite our beliefs to the contrary, we have the most enjoyable recreation after hard work, or the assurance that we deserve it, due to the fact that we have done our best in academic activities. Then, too, an arrival in the home town with satisfactory grades to present to those who have made it possible for us to attend the University is a great start for a good time throughout the holidays.

Upon the termination of the Yuletide vacation, the student will have approximately two more weeks of school before the end of the semester in which to get up countless term papers, and extremely lengthy notebooks. If he were to make an honest and conscientious attempt to accomplish most of this work right now, more time in preparation for the examinations so close at hand would be gained. While there are only three days left in which to do this "catching up," so short a time if properly applied, can complete a surprising amount of procrastinated academic work.

DO COLLEGE WOMEN THINK?

For what do women come to college? Is it to learn how to think for themselves in order to be able to stand on their feet without the aid of an intellectual crutch, or do they attend college merely because of the social prestige it gives them, and the background they receive no matter what else they might acquire?

In a women's college, it has been proven that those in attendance do not bother to think about current issues; in fact, they do not even read comprehensively. These conditions have made themselves known particularly in the southern that they will not, in the north that they will not even take time to answer a questionnaire that deals with a subject that is vital to every college student in the United States today—war and peace.

The editor of the "Quarterly," literary magazine of Barnard College, New York, decided to find out whether or not the college women had any thoughts whatsoever about the anti-war problem, and to do so the sent-out questionnaires to 74 of the women's colleges in the United States. A stamped envelope for return was enclosed.

Nineteen of the 74 replied! Thirty-two colleges in southern United States were polled; five filled out the questionnaire and returned them. Thirty-one in the northern United States were questioned; 10 replied. Eleven in the west and middle west received the questions; four answered. Roughly, the editor heard from one-sixth of the southerners, one-third of the northerners, and one-third of the westerners.

An analysis of the answers showed that there is no reason to alter the impression that the south is asleep or indifferent. But they were willing to have their eyes opened on the subject with outside help, which is more than some of the others were willing to do.

A few of the colleges questioned reported having Anti-War organizations, but for the majority of them it appears to be a topic for light conversation.

Women seem to have the idea that they would have nothing to do whatever with a war, but in that reasoning they are wrong entirely. They are just as much citizens of the United States as the men. They have the same privileges and rights. They hold the same position in the business world, and still they refuse, apparently, to think conscientiously about so serious a question.

War affects the women the same as it does the men, although not in the same manner. They agree that war is imminent at all times, but do nothing to prevent such a catastrophe.

Few are the women who realize that when the next war breaks his way into homes and offices it will carry away with it, not only men from the West, but men from the North and South. After this has happened, maybe the women will then be awakened only to find it too late to do anything about it, and the condition they will learn to despise with every ounce of hatred in their affectionate hearts.

Apology Offered By The Kernel

For several years The Kernel has been publishing a column of gossip and small talk called "Social Snickerings," the result of a more or less persistent demand upon the part of the "readers" for something to relieve the tedium of the dull moments that affect the young college.

Expressions from student readers indicated that the student body reads this column with a "grain of salt," knowing that the observations are intended facetiously and not to be taken seriously.

However, from time to time, partly because of misunderstandings and partly because of the way boys and girls, and which are not understood of the campus, expressions have appeared which were not only wholly improper, but which have given offense.

The Kernel regrets profoundly that in its issue of December 14 appeared an item in this column which may reasonably have been taken to reflect upon two admirable young women, Misses Jean Campbell and Faith Abbott.

The observations with reference to them, although intended facetiously, do reflect upon them, and none regrets this more deeply than does The Kernel, which here desires to offer them, and friends who might have been offended, this apology, and hopes that it will be accepted in the spirit in which it is intended.

STUDENT OPINION

Dear Editor: I do not believe in a brief for war, but it is like the common cold, no one has, as yet, found an absolute cure or preventive for it. This situation is so serious that I would like to add something to be present discussion on the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and preparedness.

Anyone who takes the time to familiarize himself with our history is almost forced to certain conclusions about our military policy:

1. In times of peace, it is our policy to maintain a small, but a sizeable regular army with which we can "get by."

2. During a war we depend on citizen armies—basically raised and trained after that war has started. As soon as the war is over, we reduce our armies to the barest possible minimum.

To this we can add a statement: no American war has ever been started by a professional military man.

Our policy today is essentially the same as in the past, with the difference that we are endeavoring to provide some basis (a trained cadre), for training our citizen army before we get into a war. In order to fulfill this function, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the Citizens Military Training Camps have been created.

At the end of the last war a board of officers headed by General Pershing drew up the plans now embodied in the National Defense Act. Among other things, provision was made for a peace strength regular army of 250,000 men and 18,000 officers, certainly the most modest establishment for the most wealthy and third most populous country in the world.

For two or three years this was the size of our professional army, well rounded and adequate in numbers to train itself and the reserves—the National Guard, the Organized Reserves and their feeder, the R. O. T. C. and the C. M. T. C.

Then, when we were squandering money on foreign loans and more foolish expenditures, the Congress in a penny-wise fit of economy reduced the appropriations so that today our army has less than 130,000 men and 12,000 officers.

In our last war it was more than a year before enough men were trained to make an appreciable percentage of our strength effective.

LITERARY

SONNET TO ONE I LOVED

DOUBLE ACROSTIC
May the quietude and beauty of this Christmas night
Enter, like a blessing, the heart I worshipped so.

Regret and pain and anger, dear, and fright
Rose to hold my love for you, although
You laughed back when you left me, in your spite.

Christmas evening, now, of every year, I go
Hurriedly to the window as the chimneys beat ten,
Raise the frosted shutters to the dripping eaves—
I raised it thus when you and I stood arm in arm against the ill—
To see the Christmas star. But not my heart, no longer hears "Qui vivit?"

And I no longer even grieve,
Sleep peacefully, beloved friend.

JUMPING JACK

Squeezed in between the rough hewn doors and the dirty dwarfed windows of Main Street is Big Joe's Place.

One night a man came up the two creaky steps and through the swinging doors. He stood there staring the place: rancid, cow hands, greasers, half breeds, drunk wench women, smoky air mixed with a faint smell of cooking food, music blurred by the scraping of boot heels and blatant laughter.

He was tall, blond, broad-shouldered, his features hardened by the weather. His gun hung at his right. His clothes were clean; too clean for Big Joe's Place. He crossed the room to a table near the roulette wheel. Big Joe looked up from the bar and followed him. The man pulled down a chair. Sat down. So did Big Joe.

"Stranger here?" asked Big Joe. "Not exactly," answered the man. "I've been in these parts before."

"Very long ago?" questioned Big Joe. "About six months," answered the man. "I came here, hunting."

"Hunting?" asked Big Joe. "Yes," replied the man, "a murderer." His spurs clicked as he moved his chair closer to the table. A Mexican broad tried to catch his eye but failed. "Know anyone round here by the name of Ted Norton," he asked.

Big Joe fingered the deck of what the objects think of required courses in English, Mathematics, physical education, and Hygiene. A university has as much right to require one as the other.

"Not exactly," answered the man. "If you don't like the stuff, why go to a school where you know that you will have to take it?"

"Not that," answered Big Joe. "He got it in the back."

"Tough," said the man. The Mexican broad tried to catch his eye again. Fumbled. Snubbed him disgustingly. Left him.

Big Joe shuffled the cards. He cut them. The deck of Spades shown. He cut the cards again. He held them in his left hand. Out jumped the Jack of Spades.

"A good trick," commented the man. "Yours by any means?" The man pulled off his gloves. Threw them on the table.

"I learned it from a friend of mine," answered Big Joe. "That is he was a friend of mine." He learned too much for his own good. He learned the trick from Trigger Jack. So he claimed.

The man jumped from his chair. Out came his gun. He grabbed the table. Jerked violently. The table crashed to the floor. The Mexican broad gave a muffled scream.

"Damn you, Big Joe," said the man sharply. "Only two people knew that trick. The kid and myself. I'm giving you a chance. Someone who never gave the kid." The man returned the gun to his holder. His arms hung at his sides. His eyes grew cold.

"When I come to live in his shoeing from the hip. Fast and straight," said the man. He began counting. "One...Two..."

Big Joe arose from his chair. He swallowed hard. His jaw sagged. His hand trembled. Cold sweat dripped to his forehead. Three more counts and he would get his. Before him stood Trigger Jack, the kid's brother.

"Did you ever see his brother?" the man wanted to know.

"No," replied Big Joe. "I would like to. I always like to see anyone who thinks they can beat me to the draw." Big Joe patted his gun admiringly. "Guess the kid never wrote home. Else his brother would have come here," said Big Joe.

The man stirred slightly. "Was the kid in trouble?" he asked.

"So the kid went to the bad." The man gazed questioningly into Big Joe's eyes. "What happened to him?" asked the man.

"He gambled too much," answered Big Joe. "His money ran out. He began rustling cattle. He got away with it for a while."

"Then what?" probed the man.

"He got my 'related Big Joe.' He never had a chance."

"Too many against him?" the man questioned.

Season's Greetings

FROM
R. J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY

MAKERS OF CAMEL CIGARETTES
AND PRINCE ALBERT SMOKING TOBACCO

A pound of Prince Albert in glass band, gaily packaged.

● Cigarettes for Christmas! No smoker ever has too many. But which cigarette? Remember that the brand you give reflects your own good taste...your sense of discrimination. That's why we suggest Camels. They are made from finer, more expensive tobaccos than any other popular brand. They are the choice of distinguished men and women in every field of the social and business worlds. And their finer tobaccos bring that welcome "lift" in energy—that warm good cheer—which is, after all—Christmas!

CAMELS
MADE FROM FINER, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCO

The special Christmas package with 4 boxes of Camel "fat fifties"—just the last impressive gift you have been wanting.

● Is there a pipe smoker on your Christmas list? Then your problem is solved. He's made it easy. Give him long evenings of calm contentment. Give him the sheer joy of ripe, mellow tobacco—cool and mild and bitless. Give him Prince Albert... "The National Joy Smoke." What a man spends his own money for is what he really likes. And more men spend their money for Prince Albert than any other pipe tobacco.

must have a basketball team and we must have our dances, so the only solution to the problem is for the coaches of the basketball team to get the floor in condition for basketball when the team practices.

The finals of the tournament brought out many capable performers in the University and showed that if the recent movement for a 165-pound team is successful, Kentucky will be well represented in intercollegiate circles.

Many potential champions are in this list. However, among all of this year's performers none showed the hitting power, finesse, and general all-around ability of Jack Shepherd, undefeated 135-pound University champ and winner of 32 out of 34 fights.
