Analysis of Current State and Local Funds Specifically Assigned to Various Welfare Activities

The data presented in the following tables summarize an analysis of the statutes of the several states and the approved plans of the Social Security Board.

The analysis does not include sources of funds for emergency relief activities, such a tabulation already having been made,¹ but does make available information showing the manner in which State Legislatures have attempted to finance six important welfare activities (Poor Relief, Old Age Assistance, Blind Assistance, Aid to Dependent Children in Their Own Homes, Dependent and Neglected Children Cared for by Agencies and Institutions and Soldiers' and Sailors' Relief), and gives the amounts of appropriations where specified.

Table I shows numerically the distribution among the states and local units of the financial responsibility for five types of relief. Table II indicates how these political units secured the revenues required. Tables III and IV further summarize the types of taxes and borrowings, applied to six welfare activities.

Because of the diversified types of relief granted to soldiers and sailors, a separate Table (V) has been prepared to give a summary of the current revenues available for this category. Only the funds expended for indigent soldiers and sailors are included in this analysis. Funds for State bonuses, veterans' compensation and other forms of financial assistance not based on a needs test are excluded.

No attempt has been made to go beyond the legal sources. In order to make a complete factual analysis of the source of funds for these welfare activities, it would be necessary to go behind the Acts appropriating money from general revenue to discover if specified taxes had been levied to reimburse the general fund depleted by such appropriations. Such instances cannot be traced by an examination of the statutes alone and this analysis is limited by these factors. Moreover, no attempt has been made to estimate the receipts of taxes specifically assigned to the various categories. Some of these statutes specifically assigning tax receipts do not show, particularly in the case of local property taxes, what proportion of these receipts are available for welfare activities. Since most local general funds are secured from property taxes, the assigning of a portion of this tax is, as a matter of fact, the equivalent of an appropriation from the local general fund.

In using this analysis the distinction between appropriations and expenditures should be kept in mind. That funds are appropriated is by no means conclusive evidence that they are expended. The only conclusion which may be drawn is that the money is legally available. However, since these funds are in most instances to be used over a period extending into the future they are the only indication at this date of what the expenditures will be.

An examination of this material reveals that states for the most part have depended upon general revenue rather than specific taxes to finance welfare activities. There is no indication, except for local property taxes, that State Legislatures have found it particularly expedient to assign the receipts of specific taxes to provide for the types of relief under consideration. Local property taxes have been utilized to a considerable extent, but an examination of the statutes shows that these taxes generally date back many years; more recent legislation has not utilized this source to the extent which might be inferred from a cursory glance at the summary tables. The other specific taxes which are recorded are widely diversified in type and fail to indicate any significant tendencies away from the use of general funds.

The number of States in which borrowing is authorized to finance these categories of welfare activity is small (Table IV). The majority of such authorizations have been made to finance permanent improvements such as almshouses and children's homes or to supplement, temporarily, current funds which because of some emergency are insufficient. The small extent of the resort to borrowing for the support of categorical and poor relief is in sharp contrast to the broad use of borrowed funds for emergency unemployment relief in the States during the depression.

A rough estimate of the amount of funds available indicates that the two groups who are receiving the greatest financial aid from the States and local units are the needy aged and the indigent veterans, with the amounts available for the aged far in excess of the sums appropriated or made available to any of the other categories discussed in this bulletin.
