Dining Services puts new meal plan on hold for this fall

By Jason McAllister
MANAGING EDITOR

Problems with the state's budget plan are preventing UK Dining Services from renovating on-campus dining services.

Last Wednesday, Franklin County Circuit Judge Roger Crittenden issued an injunction on Gov. Ernie Fletcher's proposed spending plan. The effect on UK — the university must seek state legislative approval to spend greater than $399,000 for any project on campus.

The spending cap closes the lid on UK Dining Services that needed funds for renovations to start next year's proposed meal program.

Students will continue to use the declining-balance, a la carte "Diner Plan" this fall. Students will have an $825 plan this fall.

The new meal program previously scheduled to start this fall will be delayed until the 2005-06 school year.

The program would have had a minimum option of $825 a semester, allowing 10 meals per week, and included more expensive plans for students wanting more on-campus meals.

"The Food Services Student Advisory Committee supports the change from an a la carte plan to a meal program, as long as more fresh, made to order and healthier food options will be available for students," said Jim Wims, assistant vice president for Student Affairs, in a recent UK press release. "When funding authority is given, the university is fully committed to this project."

With $399,000, Blazer Hall will have a new dining hall this fall, but this falls short of what was planned, said Dewitt King, assistant director of dining services.

The new meal program would require more food options for students, especially those wanting to eat on-campus all week long, said

Randy Gonzales, chief financial officer in Student Affairs.

This requires more food serving facilities, he said. "We had required $1.2 million for Blazer alone," Gonzales said.

Plans for Blazer were to include a new pizza/deli station, a soup and salad bar and a new convenient store that would be moved a floor beneath the store currently at Blazer, King said.

Dining Services said $2.2 million would be needed to implement to the new meal program campus-wide.

Despite budget woes, some at Dining Services say they are not planning to outsource jobs and management of campus food services, like local universities including UofL, ECU and WKU.

"Outsourcing is strictly a moneymaking venture," King said. "We certainly care more about the community than just making money."

Shakespeare in the Park kicks off its 23rd year at the UK-LFUCG Arboretum with Shakespeare's The Tempest

Last evening, The Lexington Shakespeare Festival kicked off its 23rd season with a performance of William Shakespeare's, The Tempest.

The show was the first of the 2004 Lexington Shakespeare Festival, held at the UK-LFUCG Arboretum on Alumni Drive.

As a part of the festival, The Tempest will be performed from July 7-11, along with Shakespeare's The Merry Wives of Windsor, July 14-18 and Andrew Lloyd Weber and Tim Rice's musical, Jesus Christ Superstar, July 21-25.

This year, the festival participants are looking forward to performing these shows in front of large audiences.

"I am expecting and excited about seeing a huge turnout this year," said Mike Fryman, a 1995 UK graduate playing Jesus in Jesus Christ Superstar.

Each show begins at 8:45 p.m., with the festival gates opening at 7 and pre-show entertainment beginning at 8. During the pre-show entertainment, local artists from Lexington and UK will provide singing and dancing performances, said Derik Mannon, general manager of the Lexington Shakespeare Festival.

All of the entertainment is held outside, and in case of rain, Mannon said Festival organizers want to do their best to ensure that the shows can be performed and the audience receives a professional performance.

Reynolds Building gets parking spots

By Stephen Burnett
STAFF WRITER

Art students say UK has improved temporary parking near the Reynolds building, but some add that more improvements are needed — both in and outside of the 57-year-old tobacco warehouse-turned-classroom facility.

Outside, many students have been parking in other lots and running across Broadway traffic to the building "like in a Frogger game," as art studio and art education sophomore Jennifer McLeod put it.

New parking spaces, or access to the existing Taylor/Dickey "E" lot behind the Reynolds area, could help solve the problem.

Art studio junior Erin Wilson said students needed their own "loading zones" as well.

"When people were cleaning out their studios, they couldn't carry a bunch of stuff to and from the meters," Wilson said. "They parked near the sidewalk, with their hazards on, and they had to get tickets."

In April, Wilson helped start a petition to add loading zones for students. She eventually met with UK's head of transportation, Ken Clevidence.

"He got right on top of it," Wilson said. "He called [UK parking director] Don Thornton, and they put in the loading zones."

Two zones near the building's front door provide 15 minutes of loading time for anyone near the building's front door. Another loading space can be used only by a valid UK permit holder.

But Wilson said the parking department has now placed "no parking" signs against one curb, eliminating several available spaces. Students had previously been able to park against the curb after 4:30, she said.

Parking director Don Thornton said the university put the signs in by mistake.

"While going through the processes of getting that corrected, the traffic engineering in the city of Lexington got involved," Thornton said.

Thornton said the person responsible for the correction should return from vacation — one of the problems of trying to get maintenance work done over the summer, he added.

Meanwhile, physical plant director Jack Applegate said his department is improving access to the existing parking behind the Taylor/Dickey Education Hall.

"We've installed a temporary walk, removed vegetation and installed lighting," Applegate said. "That's on the east side of the building, to make that another entrance."

The Taylor/Dickey lot is controlled until 4:30 p.m. during the summer, Thornton said.

And "during the fall and spring semester, Monday to Thursday, we control the lot until 7:30 p.m.," Applegate continued.

"It's controlled for E permits, between 5 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. After 3:30, for any valid UK permit." Between 7:30 p.m. and 5:00 a.m., though, "anybody can park there."

Wilson said she loves the changes, although she feels it's taken a while to make them.

"We are having progress, which is incredible," she said. "You don't want to complain too much, because you don't want to upset anybody. And change is being brought about."

Inside Reynolds, newcomers could get lost amidst the thin drab walls, creaky wood floors and high-ceilinged rooms.

Art is everywhere — the building's rustic atmosphere works well with it, said art studio graduate Ezra Kellerman.

"There's space to do your own thing," Kellerman said. "You're not limited by the fact that you can't use certain materials or processes, because you're afraid of hurting something or making a mess."

That day it was about 60 degrees outside, but the building's interior was much warmer.

"You can imagine 85 degrees inside," Kellerman said, referring to previous interior temperatures during the summers.

UK's physical plant workers have put ventilation into the photo lab and printmaking room.

Former UK runner sprints to Olympic trials

By Elizabeth Troutman
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Cross country champion and Academic All-American Thomas Morgan will represent UK in Sacramento, Calif., this Friday to await participation in next week's Olympic trials.

Morgan qualified for the trials during the outdoor season with a B-Standard time.

A B-Standard time means he is on a waiting list for the opportunity to even compete in the trials.

He is currently entered in the 5,000-meter and the 1,500-meter events. He will know Saturday whether he has been accepted to run in Monday's 5,000, and will learn Tuesday whether he will run in Thursday's 1,500. Only the Top 24 qualifiers will run the 5,000, the Top 30 in the 1,500.

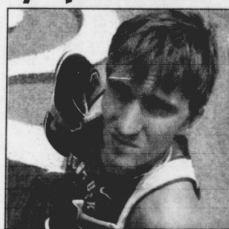

Morgan's career was halted due to an iron deficiency in his blood which caused anemia during the outdoor track season in April. Morgan suffered from fatigue and was put on supplements to increase his red blood cell count. His temporary illness raised question about his performance next week, but the athlete is positive about the trip.

"I'll be ready to race no matter what," he said. "It's tough to say because of my set-back. I feel better now but I don't have a solid foundation to go off."

Morgan claimed victories in both the SEC championship and the Southeast Region last November. He led the Wildcats to the NCAA championship, where

Prediction: curses get one more year

Yankees over Cubs in October, Braves out of playoffs first time since 1990, Bonds record among prophecies

By Dustin Thacker
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

As baseball's regular season approaches its halfway point, several interesting scenarios are forming to make for a climax that every sports fan should get into.

Despite manager Lou Piniella's remarkable job of turning the no-name Tampa Bay Devil Rays into a .500 club, the AL East still belongs to the Yankees and Red Sox.

Again, the Yankees' roster looks like an all-star team. Currently in first place, sitting on the majors' best record and a lineup that includes Jeter, Giambi, Sheffield and Alex Rodriguez, don't be surprised if the Yanks go over 100 wins.

However, don't forget about the Red Sox, who are currently in second place and just got their best player back from injury in shortstop Nomar Garciaparra. If any team has the pitching to compete with the Yankees, it should be the Red Sox with Curt Schilling and Pedro Martinez. Nonetheless, anticipate the Yankees to win the division and the Red Sox to seize the wildcard.

The AL Central is the weakest division in baseball, with Cleveland, Kansas City and Detroit all in a rebuilding mode. Expect the Indians to fade away as the dog days of summer roll on. Despite one of the league's lowest payrolls, the scrappy Minnesota Twins currently hold first place in the division, but the wealthier Chicago White Sox have the capability to acquire talent, as they did when they traded for the market's best available starting pitcher, Freddy Garcia, and will take the division from the Twins.

Currently leading the AL West are the shocking Texas Rangers. After trading away the league's best player, the aforementioned A-Rod, it appeared the Rangers were building for the future. With a two-game lead in the division, it seems that the future is now. Still, do not be surprised if the Anaheim Angels overtake the division by the end of this season. Anaheim has great hitters, solid starting pitchers, and an elite bullpen. Oakland will also be in the hunt thanks to the league's most consistent pitching rotation. Look for the A's to challenge for the wildcard.

In the NL East, the Cincinnati champion Florida Marlins are proving this season that their success was not a fluke. The Marlins have a slight deficit to overcome courtesy of the Phillies, which they should make up handily as the post-season approaches.

It appears the luck has finally run out in Atlanta where the usually dominant Braves have fallen to right at the .500 level and could be out of the playoffs for the first time since 1990. The Brave dynasty will likely begin its destruction as the team will begin to trade away star players for prospects and cash.

It would be nice if the Cincinnati Reds could keep pace in the NL's Central Division but it probably will not happen. Eventually a patchwork pitching staff and the toughest division in baseball will catch up with the Reds. Expect the race for the Central to be the most competitive of any and to come down to the last week of the season.

The Astros are loaded and have a leading Cy Young award candidate in 41-year-old Roger Clemens. The first-place Cardinals have the second-best record in all of baseball right now and have last season's MVP hitting machine, Albert Pujols, who is starting to catch fire. However, when all is said and done, look for the second-place Chicago Cubs to win the division thanks to superior pitching from Kerry Wood and Mark Prior. The Cardinals will come away with the wildcard and make their way to the postseason as well.

The resilient Giants have managed to block out the distractions of Barry Bonds and claim first place in the NL West. Bonds has been astonishingly good, in fact maybe too good; teams have almost completely stopped pitching to him. He already has broken the MLB record for intentional walks with 56. Look for San Francisco to trade for another hitter, to force teams to pitch to Bonds. This should help them keep the division lead over the Padres and Dodgers, two teams lacking the offense necessary to challenge the Giants for the divisional crown.

Watch the second half of the season unfold. It promises to be interesting with teams like the Yankees, Red Sox, Giants and Cubs all looking at postseason spots. Watch Roger Clemens dominate National League competition at 41. Keep your eyes on the Chicago Cubs as they try to win their first World Series in over 100 years. Catch a glimpse of Barry Bonds as he approaches the all-time home run record; even if you hate him at least take into account that you could be watching the best player ever.

In the end it will be the Yankees over the Cubs in six games. I cannot logically pick against the Yankees' talent, and with one of the best leaders in the game in Joe Torre, picking against them would be like picking against the Lakers in the NBA Finals.

'SO FAR SO GOOD...'

IN OUR OPINION

Budget prevents change

A recent injunction on Gov. Ernie Fletcher's proposed budget for the state has resulted in spending caps on campus projects. Universities are awaiting clarification from the judge before they can move forward.

UK Dining Services has put the majority of its renovations on hold, causing the proposed campus-wide meal plan to be delayed at least a year. UK has money budgeted for the renovations, but cannot spend greater than $399,000 of its own money on a project without approval in Frankfort.

Universities like UofL, University of Cincinnati, EKV and WKU have outsourced their campus food services to companies like Aramark, Sodexo and Chartwells.

These companies provide professional management of food services for universities, and also open universities up to competing companies.

They also provide efficient service and are also free to make renovations and improvements in a time of a state budget confusion.

On the downside, the university would have to eliminate jobs and the potential for profits from campus-run food services.

UK Dining services also fears that outsourcing to food service companies would cause smaller restaurants on campus to be shut down.

UK Dining Services says it is doing its best to keep the jobs here on campus. It is trying to renovate dining facilities, and provide quality food for students.

If the university has the funding to provide this, then Frankfort should expedite the process of allowing approval for universities to renovate their services.

Translation of Kerry's speech

E. Stephen Burnett
KERNEL COLUMNIST

By this time Sen. John Kerry (D-Mess) has finally chosen his running mate, Sen. John Edwards (D-NC), who is a former presidential contender himself and part-time department store plastic mannequin. Edwards adds a diversity much needed on the Democrat ticket, by having two male, Liberal senators, both named John?

Kerry is trying desperately to broaden his image not only by picking on Edwards but by reaching out to more of America, in the form of a small Minnesota town called Cloquet.

His July 2 remarks there made it to TV, but I noticed something strange. Whenever people like the Iraqis are on American TV, the broadcasters always translate everything they're saying, supposedly because they (the Iraqis) aren't speaking English. But they never do the same thing with Liberal politicians, which is only fair considering our media's commitment to equal treatment and such.

Therefore I'll offer my own translation of Kerry's words, in an effort certain to endear me forever to the Kerry campaign. In this limited space I'll have to condense his remarks, but that will also help by keeping you awake long enough to finish the column. Here we go:

Hello, and good morning, or afternoon. I have jet lag. Ha! That was a joke. My name is John Kerry, and I'm going to be president. I hope you will vote for me, because that other man, President Bush, is very, very bad. He says he loves you, but he's actually invading Iraq in order to get their oil and kill their little children. And also as part of his secret blood ritual with the Masons and the Scientists, and the Trilateral Commission and the Saudi Royal Family and the all-seeing Eye of the Dark Lord Sauron!

Thus your President Bush is not all he seems. He's not even a real man. He is actually from the Planet Lurtz in the Grishnakh Galaxy, wearing a disguise. You have a very nice small town here. Later today I will be doing small-town things like walking around smiling for cameras. I encourage you to walk with me, because I'm running for president. I was a Vietnam veteran, too.

You want to know how I can create jobs? Easy! I just twitch my upper lip. Like this, and then sign new legislation that will make government agencies that will create jobs. Even if they don't succeed, they themselves will make jobs because more people will be working for the government! Brilliant, huh? We'll get the money for these agencies once we get rid of Bush's tax cuts. I'll also raise the minimum wage, and that will for sure keep firms from outsourcing jobs to other countries, or firing more people. Also to keep businesses from outsourcing. I'm going to offer just incentives, such as getting rid of Bush's icky tax cuts for them. That will teach them a lesson. Our public schools are a mess. Don't listen to the people like Bush who say we can improve schools just by throwing some money at the schools. We can improve by throwing even more money at them, perhaps about $65 billion decadalization. I'll get that by repealing Bush's icky little tax cuts.

We can depend less on foreign oil. My campaign members are working on an experimental cold fusion reactor in their spare time, and plus we can drill for oil in the Alaskan National Wildlife Refuge area. Oops, that's right, we can't. That would upset the wildlife in Washington. Well, quit driving SUV's, then, if you have any of them. We need affordable health care. I'm sick of big corporations taking over health care, pretending to be nice but just caring for you. That's why I'll have the government take it over. We'll get the money for this health care by repealing the icky Bush tax cuts for the rich.

With the war on terror, we can win that by not fighting and dying so much. War is sad. There are other ways, including outsourcing American jobs. Yes, I said that. Are you surprised? Good! Maybe you even woke up.

So, let America be America again, and may God always send his, or her, blessings to you and your children and your golden retrievers.

Amusement park trip more than a sugar buzz

John Duncan
KERNEL COLUMNIST

"Why do I do this to myself?" my friend sitting next to me screamed from her clenched teeth as the coaster slung us and about 50 other people into what felt like certain doom, only to return us gently to the ground. Peals of laughter and screams erupted with each swing. My friends and I stumbled off of Delirium, laughing with dizziness, and made our way to the next ride.

The idea to visit Kings Island was spur of the moment. In less than twelve hours we were on the road. Luckily, the renowned amusement park is only about an hour and a half away and, with little road construction to hold us up, we even arrived slightly before schedule.

It had been ten years since I had stepped foot into Kings Island and I was looking forward to, most of all, the log flume (call me old fashioned). But if you leave a place fueled by the entertainment industry things are bound to change, as I would soon find out (the log flume is gone).

We purchased student discount tickets from Commonwealth Bank beforehand for only $26. If we had waited to pay at the gates, it would have been nearly $30 and then nine dollars to park.

Once we were thoroughly searched and sent through the gates, the photographers descended upon us. These were not your usual photographers either. Out of nowhere some kid (obviously starved for attention) jumped in front of us.

"Everyone smile!" He screamed gleefully.

"No! Don't take my picture, (expletive)! I'm allergic to bright flashes. You'll ruin my vacation." I said, walking toward the lockers with my hand up. He kept pace with me, never lowering the camera.

"I'll turn the flash off." He said coyly. "No. No thanks. No pictures." I tried being polite. I didn't want to anger the help right off the bat.

The cheapest things in Kings Island are the lockers, at 75 cents a pop. They are roughly the same size as the inside of a microwave. I never realized how many children are brought to Kings Island, probably because I had not been there in so long and partly because I had always been one of them.

Imagine being at a circus without cages. Kids were whacked out on sugar everywhere. It looked like the red light district in Amsterdam — only instead of prostitutes there was a Nickelodeon theme. Kids ran without destination, like flocks of geese responding only to instinct while flying in a hurricane — a sugar hurricane.

We started off riding coasters and reliving the fuzzy-fueled dreams of our youth. The Son of Beast was certainly a great addition to the park. Being the tallest (218 feet) and the fastest (78 mph) wooden roller coaster, the Son definitely outdid its father, the Beast (which coincidentally was celebrating its 25th birthday). Other honorable mentions were the Vortex, the Racers (come on, you gotta love the racers) and Face/Off.

On our way to the water park, we were assaulted by the photographers again. This time I wasn't so nice and neither were they. He stood smiling and raised his camera, and this time I only looked ahead towards him and said "NO" in a very sturdy tone. He lowered the camera and met my stare. I could have sworn that I heard him say "See you later, dead man," as we walked away I was paranoid the rest of the day that I was on the employee blacklist.

We grabbed a few beers (five dollars per beer and three bucks for a coke) and some sandwiches (seven dollars) and then headed to the water park because I never swim on an empty stomach. Usually I don't swim without water wings either, but they were $15 and they didn't have my size. The lockers on the wet side: five dollars.

Most of the rides were plastic tubes that would shoot you out into a shallow pool (typical) but there were a few that had character. The Tisamanian Typhoon was probably the best. It was a four-person ride that resembled a toilet bowl. They shoot you and three friends down a dark, cold tube and out into this giant cone that shoots you out eventually into a (you guessed it) shallow pool.

The Pipeline Paradise, advertised as being the only place to bodyboard in the Midwest, was unusually terrifying. As the only other male in our group and I stood in line, a very young boy looked at me and said: "Mister, you better tie your shorts on tight or everyone will laugh." He was right and not about the laughing part.

I looked at the rest of our friends (five girls) waving us on. Visions of me confused and scared, being chased naked by security armed with nets and tasers exploded into my mind as I quickly tightened my shorts. I could see the photographers cryptically laughing and taking pictures as security converged on me.

I managed to keep my pants on and I also got about three gallons of chlorine water shot through my body as I was propelled backwards. The ride lasted for about five seconds but it was truly five seconds of terror.

Unfortunately, the line at the lazy river was too long so we packed up and returned to the dry side of the park.

Jostled and on the brink of massive concussions, we ended our night with Drop Zone, a ride that goes 315 feet into the air and then drops you. It sounds fun and after it's over, it is, in between, it's absolutely horrific. Everyone loved it.

And then our trip was over. There was a brief fireworks show. Strung out kids began going into diabetic comas and passing out where they stood. A packet of seven year old wiring up on Dip-n-Dots put up brief resistance in the back of the park, but were eventually quelled by Boo-Boo and Huckleberry Hound. Overall, the trip was a blast.

A word to the wise: stay overnight, bring lots of cash and don't forget your water wings.

Summer releases cure boredom

By Keith Cox
STAFF WRITER

In 1972 a crack commando unit was sent to prison by a military court for a crime they didn't commit. These men promptly escaped from a maximum-security stockade to the Los Angeles underground. Today, still wanted by the government, they survive as soldiers of fortune. If you have a problem, if no one else can help, and if you can find them, maybe you can hire...the A-Team.

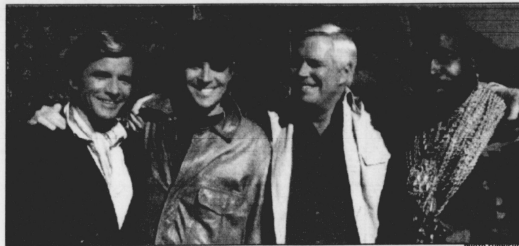

Cue the machine gun bullets and military jeeps flying through the air.

For people who grew up in the 80s and pop culture fanatics alike, this introduction is immediately recognized from the opening credits of The A-Team, just one of several TV shows joining a lineup of season-by-season boxed sets on DVD this summer.

If you've got a bad case of the summer "I'm-stuck-in-town-with-nothing-to-do" blues, these DVDs are a terrific way to kill large amounts of time, and are chocked-full of entertainment.

Did you like this spring's comedy hit Starsky & Hutch, starring Ben Stiller and Owen Wilson? Why not check out the series that started it all, with Paul Michael Glaser and David Soul in the title roles? The series was a cop drama, not a comedy, but that by no means diminishes its quality.

Starsky & Hutch: The Complete First Season (list price $49.95) is on shelves

The A-Team series is one of many nostalgic DVD releases this summer. Others include the Dukes of Hazzard and Knight Rider.

now. The Complete Second Season will be released on July 20, the same day that the movie comes to DVD. This set will also retail for $49.95.

Also in stores now are The Dukes of Hazzard: The Complete First Season (list price $39.98) and The A-Team: Season One (list price $59.98).

This year is a very special one for "them dang Duke boys": It marks the 25th anniversary of the show's television debut. Along with a big-screen version expected to "yee-haw" into theaters sometime next year, you might want to take a look at the small-screen sensation that inspired it.

The A-Team follows the exploits of a quartet of crazy characters: Colonel John "Hannibal" Smith (George Peppard), Templeton "Face" Peck (Dirk Benedict),

M. "Howling Mad" Murdock (Dwight Schultz), and Sergeant Bosco "B.A." Baracus (Mr. T. in the role that plunged him into stardom). The "B.A." stands for "bad attitude," as you might have guessed.

If these great shows aren't enough, look for Knight Rider: Season One (list price $59.98) to be released on August 3, starring that butt of countless Baywatch and German pop star jokes, David Hasselhoff, and a super-savvy black Trans-Am powered by computer intelligence named K.I.T.T.

There are no special features on The A-Team, although you can select scenes from each episode. There is no information yet on any features for Knight Rider.

You've no doubt noticed that these DVD sets can be a bit expensive.

Here's a tip: Don't scout the retailers to find the best price, go online and order them. If you're a regular shopper on Amazon.com, you can save 30 percent or more off the list price, and you can even get free shipping on items over $25. The special features on some of these sets, like Starsky and Hutch and the Dukes of Hazzard, are alone worth the extra money.

So stop by your grocer's freezer and pick up a classic Swanson frozen TV dinner, break out your Incredible Hulk tray and pop in a few episodes of these great shows and re-live the good ol' days.
