Delaware committee to interview University leaders about Roselle

By ELIZABETH WADE
Associate Editor

The University of Delaware presidential search committee will be at UK tomorrow to interview faculty and students about UK President David Roselle's candidacy for the position at their school.

"They called me and arranged a meeting," said UK Faculty Senate Chairman Don Leigh. "It's a faculty member. It's the chairman of the search committee. A number of Universities have contacted him about the position of president. In this case he agreed to be seriously considered. He is an active candidate for this."

Mary Hempel, University of Delaware director of information, said last night that she was not aware of any Delaware representatives coming to Lexington.

"I have no information about that," she said. "The trustee search committee said they may have an announcement tomorrow morning about another candidate."

Joseph Duffey, chancellor of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst; Catherine Lyall, executive vice president of the University of Wisconsin system; and Marguerite Ross Barnett, chancellor of the University of Missouri at St. Louis already have been interviewed for the Delaware position.

UK spokesman Bernie Vonderheide said Roselle, who was in San Diego yesterday, had no comment about the position and that any statements should come from the University of Delaware.

Roselle told some members of the faculty Senate Tuesday that he has become increasingly frustrated with state leaders' attitudes toward funding higher education.

James Applegate, a UK professor of communications, said if the state does not receive more funding in the 1990 legislative session, Roselle may decide to go to a university that receives better funding.

"I think it depends on the signals he gets from the legislature. If he does decide to leave it'll be because despite his best efforts he hasn't gotten the help to move the University forward," Applegate said. "If mediocrity is the message, he probably will think about taking advantage of the opportunity to leave."

Applegate said many UK faculty members are frustrated with the state's seeming hesitancy to increase funding to higher education.

"The state is in need of a fairer and higher level of taxing. We're taxing on a political level," Applegate said. "You get what you pay for. The ball is in Frankfort's court, not just for Dr. Roselle but for the University of Kentucky. It's all rooted in whether the state provides resources to compete with class one institutions or recede into backwaters."

UK Student Government Association President Sean Lohman said yesterday that UK would suffer if Roselle left. Lohman said that lawmakers need to "make an investment to make UK a quality institution that Roselle would be proud of."

"We need to give Roselle a budget he can work with and get back to education and not looking for money," Lohman said. "He's done a fantastic job. We cannot lose him. In order for him to stay, we need to get more money."

State Rep. Ernesto Scorsone, D-75th, said if Roselle leaves UK, it probably would not have a significant impact on lawmakers' decisions to fund higher education.

"I think it'd be a disaster if he left," Scorsone said, whose district

Rally today to demonstrate UK support for president

A rally will be held today at 5 p.m. in front of the Administration Building to encourage UK President David Roselle to remain at UK.

Roselle, who is a candidate for the presidency of the University of Delaware, told several members of the faculty Senate that he is becoming discouraged with the state's lack of funding for higher education.

Student Government Association President Sean Lohman called an emergency meeting of the student organization President's Round Table to discuss the plans for today's rally.

"It is really important that the students, faculty, staff and the entire University community let Dr. Roselle know how much he means to us," Lohman said after the meeting. "We don't realize how much he has done for us. We owe it to him to show him our appreciation."

Although the rally will focus on Roselle, organizers said they also will stress the need for the state to adequately fund higher education.

"Another reason is to let the political legislature know that we need more funding and more importantly let the governor know," Lohman

Lohman urges SGA senators to attend rally

By MICHAEL L. JONES

UK President David Roselle "has done more for this institution than anyone in its history," Student Government Association President Sean Lohman told the SGA Senate at its meeting last night.

Lohman urged the senators to attend a pro-Roselle rally at 5 p.m. today in front of the Administration Building. The rally is in reaction to reports that Roselle is seriously considering leaving UK if chosen president of the University of Delaware next month.

"Hopefully we can sway him to stay," Lohman said. "We need to do all that we are going to do this week and next... We can let everyone know this is a big concern to UK, the city and the state."

Lohman said that Roselle is only "throwing balls in the air" and has not made a decision whether to leave to UK.

Lohman told the senators that he was contacted by Delaware's presidential search committee and they want to interview him about Roselle. Lohman said that Delaware officials are not going to make a recommendation until the end of December.

"This is very important," Lohman said. "He is our key lobbyist." College of Engineering Senator Mike Bowling said that "there is

Roselle honored for work with information technology

Staff reports

UK President David Roselle was honored for his use of information technology in higher education.

Roselle was given the 1989 CAUSE Recognition Award for Institutional Leadership at the national conference of CAUSE, a professional association for computing and information technology in San Diego.

The CAUSE award includes a $1,500 contribution to UK, which Roselle has designated to UK's general scholarship fund.

Roselle was cited for bringing national attention to UK by allocating resources for major projects dealing with general-purpose computing, communications, microcomputers, supercomputing and administrative information systems.

The association also said that Roselle has become a highly visible and active advocate for the application of information technology in higher education through his many speaking engagements and participation on national committees.

Since Roselle became UK's president in 1987, the University has installed a supercomputer, increased mainframe computing capacity fivefold, upgraded networks and quadrupled the number of network connections. UK also has automated the student registration process and improved student access to computers.

To underscore the importance of computing and communications, Roselle initiated management changes that included the creation of the new position of vice president for information systems, which is held by Eugene Williams.

Underlying the computing and communications improvements at UK is the philosophy that technology should not be an end in itself, but rather should be used to support the overall educational, research and service mission of the university, Williams said.

The CAUSE Recognition Awards have been given annually since 1980.

Students must begin to lobby Wilkinson, lawmakers say

By DAVID A. HALL
Staff Writer

Students should be upset over the lack of support they have gotten from the state for increased funding for higher education, UK President David Roselle told students and legislators at a Tuesday meeting at the Student Center.

"The state has done a poor job, frankly, of keeping up with its share of the bargain and the students have a right to be angry, they really do," Roselle said.

Roselle said students have done their part financing higher education by paying increased tuition, and therefore the state must adequately fund it.

Students met with eight state representatives from Central Kentucky to discuss what can be done to ensure that adequate funding is allocated for the state's eight universities and 14 community colleges.

Legislators said students should take an old-fashioned approach and write letters to state lawmakers to drum up support for higher education.

"Never underestimate the impact you can have by sitting down and writing a letter to your governor or legislator," said Rep. Bill Lear, D-Lexington.

Lear said that because Gov. Wallace Wilkinson "follows the public attitude around the state," a statewide letter writing campaign could change his attitude on raising taxes.

Tara Wiggington, University of Louisville student government president, said the state's students have a responsibility to make the governor and the legislature aware of their needs.

"If (students) have opinions on higher education, then they should let them be known," Wiggington said.

Lawmakers said Wilkinson's support of a tax increase is essential for them so they can justify a tax increase to their constituents. "Wilkinson commands public attention and can mobilize public opinion," said Rep. Ernesto Scorsone, D-Lexington, whose district includes part of UK.

John Elder, UK Student Government Association administrative director of government relations, said that writing a letter or telephoning Wilkinson is an important step at securing more funding for higher education.

"The emphasis must be made on the governor because he's making the budget right now," he said. "It's the executive branch that is holding us back."

Elder began a statewide letter writing campaign earlier this year to encourage lawmakers to support a tax increase in the upcoming session of the General Assembly. And although the campaign has been successful in reaching legislators, Wilkinson remains opposed to raising taxes, Elder said.

"The governor is out there telling

Lexington to sweep roads near UK clean

Students who park on the streets around campus should beware of leave pick-up signs or they might get towed, said Jim Combs.

"The Lexington-Fayette County's Property Management Department will be cleaning streets around UK for the next two weeks. The cleaning began today on Transylvania Park and Lyndhurst Place.

Signs will be posted on the streets where the city will be cleaning, according to Jim Combs of the property management department.

"Signs are posted the day before pick-up," Combs said. "I hate to tow the kids' cars off, but we have to keep the streets clean."

Combs said that students should "watch streets for signs before they park" and avoid places where leaves and other debris are piled.

"We'll have to tow them," Combs said. "We can't clean up the streets if their cars are covering everything."

Claiborne brought respect back to UK football

In one quick statement, Jerry Claiborne was not the UK football coach any longer.

The man that had brought the football program of his alma mater from the ruins is gone. The man with the morals and integrity of five men is gone.

No more Claiborne. While some fans are rejoicing with Claiborne's retirement, true Wildcat fans are in a state of sorrow and shock. Make no mistake, the program will miss Claiborne.

As fans' statements on call-in shows got worse and worse, all they did was fuel the belief that most people who call into these shows are ignorant.

And UK Athletics Director C.M. Newton summed it best when he said: "Being anonymous is a wonderful thing. How many times in our life wouldn't all of us like to be anonymous?"

Anyone who believes that Claiborne did not work minor miracles with this program is dead wrong.

Barry Reeves

His record on the field was not that good, but there is more to college football than your won-loss percentage. By turning the UK program into one of the country's most respected, Claiborne performed the minor miracle.

But I guess his downfall was that he did not perform the major miracle—a championship caliber team without cheating.

Claiborne's teams were able to compete with the Southeastern Conference "Big Dawgs" without cheating. The Cats may not have won, but they competed with quality people—ones who went to class, graduated and were successful outside of football.

For that reason, Claiborne was a winner in the truest sense of the word.

At Tuesday's news conference, Claiborne looked like a man humiliated and sorry that he had let the people of Kentucky down because his teams had not won.

For that, the people of the commonwealth should feel ashamed. To put such pressure on a man with his integrity is pitiful. Absolutely pitiful.

The people of this state should commend Claiborne, not degrade him.

Claiborne stood his ground. He would not compromise his integrity one bit for a win or two. Don't get me wrong, winning was high on his list of priorities, but it was not No. 1. Making his players better people were his main objective.

"If the rules did not make our players better people, then we change the rules," Claiborne said Tuesday.

People who do not like Claiborne are people who do not know him. Everyone who knows the coach may not agree with everything he did, but they respect his decisions.

Before judging Claiborne, remember what the football program was like before he arrived. Fran Curci ran a program about as bad as possible.

Curci's players were listed in the police blotter on a recurring basis. Curci's players were rarely seen in class or being honored at graduation.

Sure a couple of Curci's teams had good years, but that was later clouded by the fact that he broke rules and was humbled by the NCAA with probation.

The fact is, Curci's program was a disgrace to UK and Kentucky. Just like Barry Switzer, Curci decided that wins were his top priority. Rules and the future of his players did not matter.

Curci or Claiborne? Which would you pick?

To sum it up: Curci displayed the morals of a weasel.

The problem now is who will be Claiborne's successor? Newton said that he would "certainly take a Jerry Claiborne clone."

Are there any Claiborne clones willing to become his successor? That's a big question. Newton thinks he will be able to find one though.

Names being tossed around are the University of Louisville's Howard Schnellberger, the University of Pittsburgh's Mike Gottfried and Eastern Kentucky University's Roy Kidd.

All three were candidates when Claiborne was hired in December 1981.

Gottfried is the logical choice for the job. He is respected throughout the college football community for rebuilding the Pitt program, both on and off the field.

I was able to watch him work miracles with the Murray State University program when he was there in the late 1970s to early '80s. He is young and quite energetic. He's far more likely to remain in coaching much longer than Schnellberger or Kidd.

He has shown the discipline needed to run a program the right way. He suspended his top running back, Craig Hayward, for three games two years ago.

Another big advantage that Gottfried has is that he now has recruiting connections in Pennsylvania and New York—where big linemen and linebackers usually are found.

And finally, he is the best of friends with UK basketball coach Rick Pitino. Pitino would like nothing more than for Gottfried to come to UK, and so would I.

Curry's winning season stems tide of complaints from fans

By DAVID LEON MOORE
USA TODAY/Apple College Information Network

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Bill Curry rises at 4:30 every morning. Time to himself, for reflecting and thinking clearly.

He calls it his "sanity time." Things become less sane a little later, when Alabama football fans begin to stir.

Boy, do they stir. Of course, Curry, in his third, and by far happiest, year as the Alabama coach, knows all about that. He's survived a death threat, a brick thrown through his office window, plus innumerable angry letters and phone calls demanding his firing.

Suddenly, however, it seems Curry is an OK guy. Funny how everything changes with a 10-0 record, a No. 3 national ranking and, with a victory Saturday against Auburn (8-2, No. 10), a shot at a national championship.

Listen to the folks calling in to his weekly radio show:

Caller: "This is Jim from Opelika, and I would just like to say that I apologize for not supporting you from the beginning. I'm with you now, and I'm sorry it took so long."

Curry: "No need to apologize, Jim. The thing about our business is you have to prove yourself." It has not been easy.

Curry's hiring in 1987 to replace Ray Perkins was met with outrage from Crimson Tide loyalists who couldn't believe a guy who had never played for or coached under demigod Bear Bryant, who turned 'Bama football into a religion, would get the job.

They quickly mobilized. There was a death threat aimed at Curry, plus one for Josh Thomas, the then-school president who went out on a limb to hire a guy better known for his playing career (a center for Vince Lombardi's Green Bay Packers and Don Shula's Baltimore Celts) than his coaching career (31-43-4 in seven years at Georgia Tech).

A 7-5 record in 1987 calmed no one.

Then came a homecoming loss to Mississippi last year, and a brick through his office window.

"It bothered my wife a lot, and it bothered my mom," Curry said. "I guess it's stupid, but it didn't really bother me. I don't know why."

Since then, Alabama has lost just two games, finishing 9-3 last season and going 10-0 so far this year.

So, as Alabama fans nervously await the Crimson Tide's historic first trip to Auburn, Curry is breathing easier about his own future.

Caller: "Coach, I was in your office some time ago and asked you for an autographed picture. I just want to say that it came. I began to trust you when I got that picture."

Curry: "Glad you got it."

At the beginning of the season, Alabama pessimists—Curry calls them "The Fellowship of the Miserable"—figured they'd be running him out of town about now.

"We were in a hostile stadium against a hot team that was beating us into the dirt. But I saw resolve, and I saw this calm in Gary Hollingsworth, and I saw our defense just set its jaw and go back to work. I said, 'By golly, we're gonna do something to win this game.'"

Bill Curry,
Alabama football coach

Nothing forecast a season like this. Especially not when, early in the season, quarterback Jeff Dunn and top running back Murry Hill went down with injuries.

But lightly regarded Gary Hollingsworth stepped in at quarterback and junior college transfer Siran Stacy took over the running chores. And in the fourth week something strange and wonderful happened.

At Mississippi, the Tide got ambushed. Alabama trailed 21-0 just 7 1/2 minutes into the game.

What happened next, Curry says "was the pivotal point of our season and the highlight of my 15 years in coaching."

Hollingsworth got hot. Alabama's defense stiffened. The field tilted the Tide's way.

Curry said: "We were in a hostile stadium against a hot team that was beating us into the dirt. But I saw resolve, and I saw this calm in Gary Hollingsworth, and I saw our defense just set its jaw and go back to work. I said, 'By golly, we're gonna do something to win this game.'"

Halftime score: Alabama 48, Mississippi 21. Final score: Ala-ma 62, Mississippi 27.

Running off the field at halftime, Curry bumped into Larry New, his defensive line coach. "He's got these tears in his eyes, and he says, 'We got us a football team.' I said, 'Yeah, we do.'"

Three weeks later came a pivotal victory at Penn State, when 6-7 defensive end Thomas Rayam blocked an 18-yard field goal in the final seconds to preserve a 17-16 Alabama win.

Caller: "Coach Curry, I'd like to give a little credit to Thomas Rayam's parents. You know, they really deserve credit, 'cause if Thomas was 6-4 instead of 6-7, we'd be 7-1 right now 'sted of 8-0.'"

His biggest fault as the Alabama coach is that he was never one of Bryant's boys.

Curry, 47, fashion model handsome, deeply religious, a bit of a fitness freak, has always fought long odds, starting his pro football career as an undersized 20th-round pick of the Packers.

"That was in 1965, and every year since then, I've gone to work not knowing if I'd have a job the next year," he said. "So I don't feel threatened."

Former Alabama center Gaylon McCollough, a Birmingham plastic surgeon, said: "The average man would not have been able to stand up under the pressures that were put upon Bill his first couple of years. But what's happened to him at Alabama is just another chapter in his life. People have told him over and over again that he couldn't do things and he's proved them wrong."

The Readers Speak

We asked and we received. A few weeks ago, the esteemed Kernel critics picked their Top 10 albums of the decade. So as not to look like we were elitist pigs sitting in our ivory tower, we asked you, the readers, to compile your own Top 10s. Due to space limitations, we were not able to print all of them but our thanks to everyone who sent one in.

Charles McCue, Assistant Arts Editor

I was unable to compile my Top 10 songs because I was at a convention in New Orleans, so here it is.

The following are not necessarily my favorite songs from the '80s, but I feel they best represent this unpredictable and innovative decade.

9. "Kundalini Express" Love and Rockets
8. "Under the Milky Way" The Church
7. "Desire" Gene Loves Jezebel

3. "She's Lost Control" Joy Division
2. "Dear God" XTC

The passing decade has been one of the many changes in the music, many of which are conspicuously absent in the following list. It ignores the hip-hop revolution, leaves aside zydeco and the jutu music coming out of South Africa, and fails to mention the rise to prominence of such influential black performers as Anita Baker and the brothers Marsalis. What it does attempt to do is give a different perspective than that presented by the Kernel's four critics, which while valid seemed top heavy from the latter portion of the decade.

Book shows bodily myths

By GREGORY SKWIRA
USA TODAY/Apple College Information Network

Marc McCutcheon says he's not sure where the idea for his offbeat new book came from.

Perhaps it was the time a couple of years ago when he found himself agog over goose bumps, or the interview in which his curiosity was piqued by the pituitary.

"I'm addicted to odd facts about the body," says McCutcheon, a free-lance science journalist who lives in Maine. "I collect them and throw them in a big file, hoping I'll be able to do something with them someday."

McCutcheon's file turned into his first book, "The Compass in Your Nose and Other Astonishing Facts About Humans" (Tarcher, $8.95), a pop-science tour of the amazing device each of us was issued at birth.

McCutcheon sees the human body as a flesh-and-blood version of the Swiss Army knife, equipped with a variety of tools we don't even know about.

Take the book's title, for instance. McCutcheon points out that we all carry around traces of iron inside our noses that orient us in relation to the earth's magnetic field — the same function performed by a compass.

Evolution has led us to ignore this handy directional tool, but research has shown it to resemble the homing devices of salmon, carrier pigeons and honeybees. Evolution also has obscured the purpose of the goose bump, a temperature-triggered device used by our ancestors "to erect the coat of hair that we lost 100,000 years ago," says the author.

McCutcheon says he's intrigued by the possibility that the pituitary gland might be doing the glamorous work credited in love songs to the prosaic heart muscle. While interviewing a leading sex researcher for a magazine article, he learned of studies suggesting that those deprived of certain hormones emitted by the pituitary might find it impossible to taste the joys of romance.

"These people can show affection," he quotes the researcher as saying. "But most of them will never experience pair-bonding, the phenomenon most of us call falling in love."

McCutcheon's work for OMNI and Science Digest magazines led him to other observations about body parts. And part of the book deals with the way our bodies are affected by external forces.

Some of McCutcheon's facts, of course, are not pretty. He notes, for example, that 75 percent of all household dust is made up of dead skin cells, and that people shed about 40 pounds of dead skin by the time they reach 70.

Some of the science discussed by McCutcheon confirms things that we always knew to be true but didn't know why. Take, for example, the common experience of heading for the chocolate supply when we're depressed.

McCutcheon points out that chocolate "contains phenylethylamine, the same chemical the brain produces when people fall in love."

Claiborne leaves UK with respect and admiration

During Jerry Claiborne's eight seasons as head coach of the UK football program, he lost more games than he won, appeared in only two bowls and never came close to winning the Southeastern Conference championship.

Yet he should be remembered by UK fans as one of the University's most important coaches. His emphasis on academics, integrity and high ethical standards served as a guiding light to many during a time when several big-time college athletics programs easily could have been confused for organized crime.

When Claiborne was hired by the University in 1982, his alma mater's program was in shambles. His predecessor, Fran Curci, had overseen a program in which some of his players were accused of breaking the law. Many fans were wondering if the term student-athlete even applied to some of the UK football players.

Immediately, Claiborne made it clear that his goal was to have a winning program, but he intended to do it by the rules.

Claiborne should be commended for running a college football program at UK — not a minor league franchise for the National Football League. With only 2 percent of all college football players making it to the professional ranks, Claiborne did not try to perpetuate the big lie by telling high school seniors that if they donned the Blue and White, they would wind up starting for the Cleveland Browns or San Francisco '49ers.

Players attended class, were told to do their homework and many graduated with a college degree prepared to make a contribution to their community as responsible citizens.

Claiborne expected his players to tow the line, and when some of them got out of line he kicked them off the team — no matter how athletically gifted they were.

Although a UK team never cracked The Associated Press' Top 20 or won a mythical national title during Claiborne's reign, UK received what should be considered to be the most prestigious accolade: the College Football Association Academic Achievement Award for the nation's highest graduation rate.

While at UK, 68 of Claiborne's players made the SEC's academic honor role, and this year UK placed the most players on the list. Claiborne did a good deal of reshaping our society's ideas toward sports and smashing some myths held that football players do not have to spend any time learning to read or write.

Claiborne was criticized by many UK fans for being too predictable in his play selection, and his wide-tackle six defense was said to be outdated to stop 1980s offenses.

Claiborne also drew fire for letting some of Kentucky's high school blue-chippers be recruited by big-time programs such as the University of Southern California or the University of Notre Dame. In that sense then, perhaps a new coach will bring a fresher style of football to Lexington and do a better job of recruiting high school players.

But it must not be overlooked that Claiborne restored integrity and honesty to a program that needed it so much. He brought student back into the term student-athlete, and for that, he deserves the UK community's thanks.

UK President David Roselle said Monday that Claiborne will be offered a position with the University. UK could only benefit by keeping Claiborne as an employee.

Fascism worse than plastic guns

For the most part, I have enjoyed and concurred on nearly every Adam Goldberg column I have read. However, Monday's article about the assassination game went too far! How DARE he question the infinite wisdom of our renowned Dean O' Students Doug Wilson! If Wilson doesn't want guns on our campus we, as students, do not want guns on campus either!

Would someone please remove that cannon in front of the Administration building! It could be mistaken for a Communist Pinko Coup on our campus!

I must side with Dean Wilson on banning the game using Hershey's Chocolate Kisses too. Why, the players could very well slip into glucose overdose. What would we do then, O Keeper of All Knowledge and Wisdom? At the very least, we have to expand the budget of our already overworked PPD to pick up the assassinatees!

Gosh, Adam, all you really care about is the freedom to have fun.

You don't give a damn about the administration who provides us students with every imaginable outlet for excitement known to man. We pay these heavy-weights good money to see beyond the clutter of reasonableness and impose far-fetched rules that we, as peon students, who haven't yet been potty-trained, couldn't possibly understand! That's why Wilson implied the "because I told you, that's why" attitude, geeez!

One last point, Adam. Our secret service department, a.k.a., UK Police, often is confused, due to the demanding work load of issuing bogus parking tickets to fee-paying students, so don't even think of giving them plastic, day-glow guns to worry about!

Really, Adam, why don't you spend more time trying to increase our tuition to bring it more in line with the super-high-quality education we're stealing from these poor bastards, instead of sticking up for the rights of a few students who would have fun on their campus?

Christmas

Time to pull out the holiday spirit and remember others

With only a week of classes left before the dreaded week of finals, most students have more than enough to think about and more than enough to do with tests and papers piling on top of each other.

But it can't be so bad that we ignore the holiday season. Christmas decorations are up in my apartment, and I have my Christmas music tapes ready to study by the next couple of weeks.

And I'm sure many already have taken the time to do some early Christmas shopping. There also will be opportunities for study breaks with holiday parties and the such.

But while many of us in the University community get caught up in this all-too-familiar routine, others are facing an annual tradition as well, one which makes our troubles pale in comparison.

There are homeless people who once again must spend cold nights outside, probably next to many of the cheerful Christmas lights decorating the city.

Lonely elderly people will once again spend the holidays alone, perhaps in a nursing home, with only their memories to keep them com-

There are children in orphanages or underprivileged homes who once again will have to do without the presents that the holiday promises.

I know there is hardly a minute to spare during these next few weeks, but if you do have some extra time, or if you need a study break, or if you can just make the time for something worthwhile, there are plenty of opportunities to get in the true holiday spirit by helping people such as these.

For instance, at noon today in the Student Center there will be the Circle of Love ceremony, at which students, faculty and staff may pick the name and Christmas wishlist of a needy child in the area so they can help make their Christmas a little better.

You choose the child and his or her gift wish according to what you can afford. After returning the presents to a designated location, project organizers will distribute them to the children.

On the other end, the holiday season for elderly people who are alone or in nursing homes can be brightened simply with a visit so they know someone is thinking about them. No one can pretend that one visit will change their lives, but young people's energy and enthusiasm can be contagious.

Nursing homes usually depress me, but a couple of weeks ago I went to a special unit at Lexington Manor and the visit changed my mind. I accompanied Jack Hodgkin, a communications senior, to the Alzheimer's special care unit, where he has been volunteering regularly.

Twenty men and women with Alzheimer's disease receive special care there with exercise programs, music and art projects, and occasional trips outside the home.

Hodge spends lots of his time there just talking with the people, and they seem to appreciate an attentive ear. Ann Cummings, the former activities director, said many of the Alzheimer patients require special attention, and "if they all had a special friend, it would help."

Local community service agencies need much assistance in the form of donated canned goods, clothing, toys and financial help. It always seems hypocritical to some when people give to charitable organizations only around holiday seasons, but it's as good a time to start as any. Volunteers also can directly serve the hungry at the Community Kitchen or Horizon Center downtown.

Lisa Brown, UK's student volunteer coordinator, can provide more information for those interested in community service. She usually can be reached in the afternoons at 257-8785. Communities in Unity, a student volunteerism organization, also can give more suggestions.

This is a stressful time for most of us within the University, but donating some of that time to some sort of community service can help put things in perspective — and it will help relieve the stress of many other people.

America only hope of Chinese students

Guest OPINION

Revolution. I remember countless professors and intellectuals whose homes were robbed and books were burned. Many were tortured and killed. Survivors were sent to labor camps in remote areas, their careers ruined.

The same things are beginning to happen now. Since last June, hundreds of students and intellectuals have been murdered or jailed secretly. Most Chinese students will tell you that we feel that if we return to China that our lives would be in danger.

Most Americans have not experienced this sort of stifling fear. The Chinese government thrives by threat. It is the only tool that they have to keep them in power. They have lost the trust of the Chinese people. They threaten our studies, our jobs, our lives and our families.

And yes, they threaten our work. They work against the Chinese people at home and abroad. And they apparently work against President Bush.

Of course, the Chinese government is not threatening the life or direct well-being of the president. The threat involves a cutting off of cultural exchange between China and the United States. Does cultural exchange mean much to the Communist Chinese government? No.

The Chinese government hates the Western idea of democracy — they call it Western pollution. All the Chinese leaders care about is their own power, their dictatorships. They will cut off anything to retain power. This June, they cut off thousands of lives.

President Bush should not seek favor from a totalitarian government that killed thousands of its own people whose only crime was to peacefully demonstrate for democracy. President Bush should not veto a bill that favors students that represent the voice of freedom to billions of Chinese people.

What will happen if President Bush signs into law the bill allowing Chinese students to stay in the U.S.? It will not hurt the United States, it will hurt the Chinese Communist dictators. Their magic tool — the ever-present threat — will have failed.

The most difficult thing about choosing to stay in the U.S. is the fact that China needs me to help build its economy and move into the future.

What China needs more than a healthy economy, however, is a democratic system. Due to media censorship, many people in China do not really know what happened last June.

If Chinese students do not return home, if they instead accept exile driven by fear, it will send a message to the people in China that the Chinese system does not work. It will help to accelerate the downfall of the Chinese dictatorship, and facilitate the rise of democracy.

The political drama in Eastern Europe provides an interesting counterpoint to the events in China. If West Germany had not agreed to accept refugees from East Germany, then we would probably not have seen the rapid political changes that took place.

Did the East German Communist government want to change, to relinquish power? No, they initially responded to calls for democracy with violent force.

Ultimately, however, they were obliged to step down because their threats ceased to work. Their people chose exile over tyranny. After the East German government was forced to adopt the democratic idea, many East Germans elected to return from West Germany.

Why? Because they had been driven from their homeland in search of freedom and liberty. When the promise of freedom came to their homeland, they returned to tackle the challenge of building a new world.

So it is with Chinese students in the United States. We will work as effectively as we can from overseas to help the cause of liberty in China and elsewhere, and then when the time comes, we will return home to help build a new democratic China.

If we are sent back to China now, then our lives will be wasted. We will languish in persecution. Please support our call to President Bush to allow us to stay and work in the United States. Our call is not just for us to have the right to stay, it is a call for freedom, liberty and democracy.

Delaware to interview UK officials about Roselle

Continued from page 1 includes part of UK. "He's a tremendous asset for the University and higher education in general. I would see it as a loss to the University and see it as a brain drain — a further indication we're losing talented people and I hope it doesn't come to that."

Students to hold rally to show support for Roselle

Continued from page 1 said, "(Today) we will be thinking Dr. Roselle, letting him know how much we appreciate him but also letting the leaders of Kentucky know and the leaders of higher education know that we need more funding here to keep him."

"I think he might leave because he sees an institution that he has put so much work into, and that he sees so much potential for the University, but it is so hard to reach that potential because of a lack of funds. I think that he's frustrated, but I also think that he thinks that maybe someone else could do a better job. Maybe he thinks a change is needed."

"I think that if we don't get more funding and no one comes through for UK or higher education then yes, I can see Dr. Roselle leaving," he said. "Dr. Roselle is the backbone of the University and if you take him away it's going to be hard on this University to stand on its own."

Charles Wettingham would be the top contender for his job since he was the No. 2 candidate behind Roselle.

Applegate said, however, said many faculty would want a nationwide search conducted if Roselle left UK.

Applegate said, however, said many faculty would want a nationwide search conducted if Roselle left UK. Wettingham could not be reached for comment.

Students to hold rally to show support for Roselle

"I think there are some people in Lexington who hold some power, some of the people with more in the University want him out. "I really am saddened to see what is happening to him. I think it is terrible that the man who has the right goals in mind for our University could be pushed out. I think what he has to offer to this University is only going to take us further."

Some people also have held Roselle responsible for the UK men's basketball program being placed on a three-year probation by the NCAA, Lerner said.

Lawmakers urge students to lobby Gov. Wilkinson

Continued from page 1 that he can give us a quality education without raising taxes, yet we know that isn't true," Elder said.

Elder said part of the problem is that Wilkinson believes that there is not public support for a tax increase.

About 70 UK students will speak to local civic organizations in 40 counties, stressing the importance of higher education.

"Wilkinson thinks Kentuckians are behind him in not raising more money for education," Elder said.

Legislators said citizens who are opposed to a tax increase still believe that proceeds from the state's lottery will fund all of the state's education needs.

"I think a lot of people still have a misconception about the lottery," Scorsone said. "Part of that is because not all of our leaders have been stressing the importance of an increase."

The speakers will meet with Roselle Dec. 8 at Maxwell Place to discuss what should be covered in a speech and how to answer questions, said Mike Chaffant, SGA special projects chairman.

Elder said that "if students can convince the state of the importance of additional funding, then we could sway (Wilkinson's) attitude."

UK SGA President Sean Lohman said that "students, parents, faculty, and anyone connected with higher education need to let the governor know that we would support him in a tax increase."

Senate has last meeting of fall semester

Lohman announced that Bruce Rucker is the student member of the screening committee to pick a new head football coach to replace Jerry Chalmers, who retired Tuesday.

Lohman said that Rucker, a third-year law student and a student member of the UK Athletics Association Board of Directors, was active in choosing Rick Pitino as the head coach of the men's basketball team.

The Senate allocated $980 to bring Robert Slutzky, a professor at the College of Architecture's Lecture Series. College of Architecture Senator Jeff Stivers, the bill's sponsor, said it was "a purely academic request... I can't see why anybody would have anything against it."

Slutzky will speak April 6. His lecture will be open to the public.

At noon today in the Student Center, students and faculty will be able to play Santa Claus as part of the Circle of Love. Participants will get a wish list of an underprivileged child's three favorite Christmas gifts.

Senator at Large Ashley Boyd said that participants can buy one or all of the gifts for the children and those who can't make it to the Student Center can call the SGA office to get a child's list.

SGA will collect books for the Book Bazaar to be held during finals week, Dec. 11-15. Students will be able to compare a list of the prices that UK and Kennedy bookstores are asking and name the price they want for their book. The books will be sold Jan. 11-12 in 231 Student Center. "They'll be able to sell for more and still buy for less," Lohman said.

Student Services Chairwoman Lesley Van Leeuwen, who is organizing the Bazaar, said students will be charged $1 to sell the books. All profits will go to the University's General Endowment Fund.

Lexington Community College Senator Keith said that LCC is collecting canned goods and white socks for the homeless. Donations can be made at 103 LCC or at several drop boxes around LCC.

SGA and the Freshman Representative Council are competing to raise the most canned goods for charity. Donations can be made at the SGA office, 120 Student Center.

The Senate's next meeting will be 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Jan. 18.

Needy children to get help from UK, Lexington agency this holiday season

By SUZANNE REESE
Staff Writer

Santa will visit some Lexington area homes with a bigger sack of gifts this year because he had help from the Circle of Love volunteers.

The UK Circle of Love is designed to give special Christmas presents to children who have little hope of having a traditional Christmas.

UK faculty, staff and students may select a wish card which will list the first name of a child or family and three gifts the child would like to have.

The cards can be picked up in 15 Memorial Hall before today's noon tree-lighting ceremony in the Student Center Great Hall or during the ceremony.

All gifts should be given anonymously. "Most of the children's wishes are very simple. They'd be excited to have something for Christmas," said Tammy Boggs, a Circle of Love committee member. "The gifts are distributed to the parents and they decide how to give them to the children."

The children are selected by area social workers and school guidance counselors. They said the children usually ask for toys ranging from dolls to bicycles.

The program began three years ago in the UK Albert B. Chandler Medical Center.

At the suggestion of UK President David Roselle, the Circle of Love was enlarged to include all UK faculty, staff and students last year.

With the combined efforts of the Medical Center and the rest of the campus, almost 1,000 children received gifts in 1988.

"The response was so enormous last year that they decided to go ahead and pick up 100 or 200 more children for this year," said Kim Fowler, UK Student Government Association Director of Special Concerns.

A goal of 1,200 children has been set for this year and is expected to be divided evenly between the UK campus and the Medical Center.

"It felt really good to know that I was helping someone," Fowler said. "The things the children asked for were so simple."

Participants in the Circle of Love may purchase one of the three gifts listed, or all three. They should wrap the gift and deliver it to 206 Student Center by Dec. 13.

Handmade ornaments, provided by the Medical Center, will be presented to those who bring gifts to remind the participant of the child they sponsored.
