Common ground needed at KSU, Jesse Jackson says

By ADARRELL OWSLEY
Contributing Writer

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Jesse Jackson avoided embroiling himself in the conflict between Kentucky State University President John T. Wolfe Jr. and the school's Board of Regents.

Instead, Jackson spoke to more than 800 students, faculty, staff and alumni yesterday about the preservation of the university's black tradition.

"I'm here because of the love for our children, I'm here because of my respect for this institution, I'm here because of the necessity of this university and its role in the community of higher education," Jackson said.

Some members of the KSU community have said the conflict threatens KSU's role in Kentucky higher education. The conflict between Wolfe and the regents climaxed last week when the board demanded Wolfe's resignation.

After his speech, Jackson helped raise money for Wolfe's legal defense fund. He started by asking for contributions of $500. Eighteen people came to the stage to give their money. Jackson subsequently asked for $250, $100, and whatever people had to give for Wolfe's defense fund.

Jackson said he hoped the money raised would not have to be used for Wolfe's defense but instead could be used for additional scholarships.

In his speech, Jackson said he was concerned about the preservation of black universities across the country.

"These schools are set up of the descendants of former slaves and served great purpose," he said.

He cited examples of traditionally black institutions that are being forced to integrate and maintain their cultural identity.

"I watched Tennessee State for example where they applied the 50/50 rule," he said.

Jackson was referring to requirements mandating that black institutions enroll an equal number of blacks and whites.

"But at the University of Tennessee that same rule does not apply,"

"I'm here because of the love for our children, I'm here because of my respect for this institution, I'm here because of the necessity of this university and its role in the community of higher education."

Rev. Jesse Jackson, political activist

he said. He also cited how Florida A&M, a traditionally black university, was being forced to have equal enrollment, while a different standard was created for the University of Florida and Florida State.

"All we're asking for is whatever the game plan is let's play it by one set of rules, whatever they are," Jackson said.

He offered advice to the Board of Regents and to Wolfe.

"I just hope that when the regents meet tomorrow that their is a spirit moving from battle ground to common ground," he said. "Reasonable men and women must sit around a table behind closed doors and as Catholics do when they choose the Pope. Stay in there, let the smoke come out of the windows, but come out on one accord and educate these children and expand this budget and give our children hope and possibility."

Jackson said the firing of Wolfe is not inevitable.

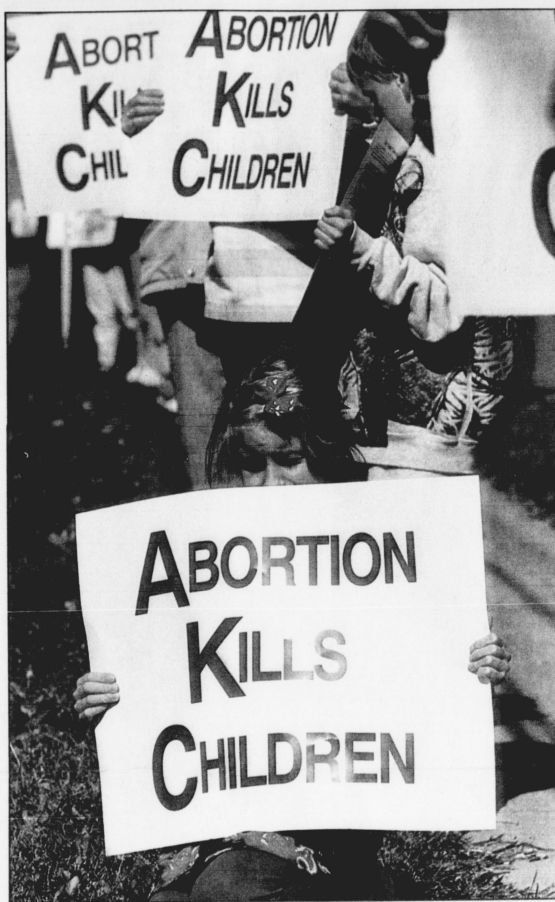

"And when this Board of Regents meets, and (has) the power to close those doors and come out and put the children and institution in front and resolve this conflict, then they must let him be the president," he said.

Students agreed with Jackson's attempt to unify the University.

"I think that his speech motivated everybody's moral," said Calvin Chatman, secretary of the KSU Student Government Association. "I think a lot of people were kind of

FOR FUTURE GENERATIONS

A human chain of 5,229 people stretched from the Waller Avenue/Nicholasville Road intersection past Fayette Mall yesterday. The purpose of the pro-life demonstration was to inform the Lexington community of the "outstanding public stand for the sanctity of life," said Jim Ishmael Jr., a member of the Central Kentucky Life Chain Committee, which sponsored the event.

Mass media used as tool by president, author says

By JOHN DYER FORT
Contributing Writer

The mainstream mass media purposely waged a pro-Persian Gulf War campaign earlier this year in support of President Bush and the military, said Douglas Kellner, a professor from University of Texas at Austin.

The mainstream media consists of the three major television networks, CNN, Time, Newsweek and U.S. News & World Report magazines, the New York Times, Washington Post and Wall Street Journal newspapers, Kellner said.

Kellner, the first Distinguished Fall Social Theory lecturer, spoke to about 75 people on campus Friday.

The mainstream media was "a conduit for Bush Administration and Pentagon propaganda," said Kellner, author of Television and the Crisis in Democracy.

"We were subjected to the most sophisticated propaganda campaign and media management in history during the Persian Gulf War. Part of that was the pool system that the Pentagon set up. The Pentagon believed that the Vietnam war was lost by the press," Kellner said.

But the U.S. military successfully controlled the media in Grenada and Panama. "Both came off as a tremendous military triumph because they kept the press away and controlled the media," he said.

During the gulf war, "every image and every word that were produced by the media had to go through a military censor to make sure that no negative information came out," he said.

There were "two totally different versions of the Persian Gulf War watching mainstream television and getting your information from alternative media," Kellner said.

Alternative news sources include Mother Jones, Unite Reader, The Village Voice and PeaceNet, he said.

Control of the media is leading to a crisis in democracy in the United States because "the American people are not being informed," he said.

Chancellor to discuss quality of teaching

By GREGORY A. HALL
Associate Editor

Chancellor for the Lexington Campus Robert Hemenway has some bombs planned to solicit discussion from his annual campus address this week.

The speeches today through Wednesday will center on the progress of his 10-point Lexington Campus Agenda, on defining future priorities and on improving teaching and learning.

Among the possible ways to improve learning is to require attendance for freshmen, he said.

"If we have a large class and there's a significant rate of absenteeism in that class ... why shouldn't we require attendance for that class," Hemenway said. "The teacher's there. ... If the student is not there, the education is not taking place."

That's not all that is planned for the speeches.

"I've got a whole series of things like that I want to sort of get out on the table," he said. "My goal is to deliberately stimulate campus thinking on these issues."

The third annual state of the Lexington Campus address will be given today and Tuesday in the Worsham Theater at noon and 8 a.m., respectively. Hemenway also will speak Wednesday at 4 p.m. in the Seay Auditorium of the Agriculture Science Building-North.

The speeches will be followed by town meeting discussions. Tapes of the speech also can be obtained by calling Hemenway's office (257-2911).

Hemenway said much of what he will say about teaching and learning will be aimed at the first year of college.

"I'm very concerned about the academic and intellectual environment we establish for students in their first year on campus," he said. He said UK should be concerned about how much interaction freshmen have with faculty. He said forcing graduate students to teach freshman classes isn't only unfair to the freshmen.

"How much of ... an unfair burden do we place on teaching assistants as the principle instructors of freshmen," he said.

Hemenway also cited academic advising as a major problem for new students. Many freshmen take part in "mass advising," in which all lower-division students are in a room with about 10 faculty who advise them in planning their class schedules.

"We have to find a way to be more effective in our advising, particularly of our freshmen and sophomores," he said.

Rethinking advising procedures and the methods by which freshmen are taught are both part of Hemenway's emphasis on the student-centered university.

"We need to be constantly re-minded of that," he said.

Hemenway said UK has asked for $4 million in the biennial budget request for instructional initiatives to improve teaching and advising on the Lexington Campus.

'Unusual odor' caused evacuation

Staff, wire reports

After someone complained about "an unusual odor" in UK's Chemistry-Physics Building Thursday night, officials evacuated the area, said Joe Famularo, Lexington commissioner of Public Safety.

"Someone from UK phoned in a unusual odor in the building ... some type of gas," Famularo said.

The building was evacuated around 6 p.m. Thursday because of the report of an ammonia-like smell.

The UK Police Department, the Lexington Fire Department, the Special Response Unit and the Hazardous Incident Team responded to the call.

Famularo said the incident was "nothing hazardous. They worked out whatever it was that caused the odor" on the third floor, he said.

Robert Guthrie, UK professor and chair of the chemistry department, said the cause of the smell is still unknown.

"As far as I can tell, the smoke detector went off for some unknown reason," Guthrie said.

"I think it was just a gigantic false alarm," he said.

The fire alarm was set off, and a fire fighter investigating the alarm detected the smell, Guthrie said.

"There are regular problems with the smoke detection system," he said. "The alarm usually goes off falsely two to three times per semester. The detectors are very sensitive."

The odor could have resulted from "the cleaning solution used by the custodians or it could have been something from the lab."

University employee honored by president

By KELLEY POPHAM
Contributing Writer

Epoc Center at Walt Disney World, Fla., closed its doors to the public last Sunday to honor two Lexington women in commemoration of President Bush's "Thousand Points of Light" program.

Connie Johnson Bowles, UK's coordinator of Operation Education, and Ann B. Black, a Lexington Public Library employee, represented Fayette County's Operation Read during the Points of Light festivities Sept. 29-30. More than 500 honorees attended.

The literacy program, sponsored by organizations including the Kentucky Literacy Commission and United Way of the Bluegrass, was designed to improve literacy among adults via volunteer tutors.

Bowles and Black, who received medallions for their efforts, said they felt like royalty in the Magic Kingdom.

"Disney knows how to put on a party," Black said.

The trip not only included free transportation, access to all Disney World attractions and a champagne party for honored guests but also an opportunity to meet the president after a special ceremony led by Bush and first lady Barbara Bush.

"I got to meet President Bush," Bowles said. "I shook his hand and he hugged me, saying we're doing a great job."

"I realized that we really are out here in our country doing something important. It was a really overwhelming feeling."

Bowles, a University volunteer, became involved with Operation Read in 1988 as a result of the University's relationship with the program. Bowles, who became one of the program's 11 board members in February, provides volunteer tutors with the training necessary to teach.

Since it began in 1979, the program maintains nearly 200 tutors and 400 pupils annually and has awarded more than 1,000 adults the ability to read.

Ann B. Black, also an Operation Read board member, coordinated and co-founded the Lexington Public Library's Book Buddy Program, which spawned from Operation Read in December 1988. The Book Buddy Program now serves 105 house-bound people by the delivery of library materials, up 83 from when the program began.

Michael Eisner, president of Walt Disney World and chairman of the Points of Light Committee, held the celebration, which recognizes groups or individuals who are tackling U.S. social problems.

The festivities allowed groups with similar priorities the chance to meet and share ideas to strengthen their programs.

Although Bowles said she has gained insight from a literacy program that not only provides reading skills but also workshops and personal training. Both Bowles and Black said Operation Read is a comparatively strong program.

"Kentucky is far ahead of the other states in literacy staff, board — everything," Black said.

While the state may lead the country in literacy training and awareness, Bowles and Black are pushing their program into the future.

Bowles said she plans to continue her work with Operation Read volunteers, hoping someday that "we'll work ourselves out of business."

Egyptian monuments topic of lecture

Staff reports

An archaeological expedition into ancient Egyptian monuments threatened by destruction will be the topic of a lecture by Richard Fazzini, Chairman of Egyptian, Classical and Ancient Middle Eastern art at the Brooklyn Museum.

The presentation will be tonight at 8 in 118 White Hall Classroom Building.

The monuments and temple complex are located near Luxor on the Nile in Upper Egypt. They are visited each year by countless tourists, but their survival is now threatened by the high water table, salt accumulations and pilferage.

In his slide-illustrated lecture,

Fazzini will summarize the work of the "Mut Expedition" which has excavated the temple precinct of the goddess, Mut, chief consort of the god Amun-Re.

Fazzini's presentation is sponsored by the Kentucky Society of the Archaeological Institute of America, UK's Department of Classical Languages and Literatures and the Department of Anthropology.

The presentation is free and open to everyone. A public reception immediately following the lecture will be held in the Museum of Anthropology in Lafferty Hall.

Cats' fall to Rebels 35-14 despite rise of Jones

A tale of two QBs: Smith lands on bench

By JOHN KELLY
Staff Writer

It was a tale of two quarterbacks Saturday night as the Mississippi Rebels (5-1) halted UK's streak of home night game victories at 10, whipping the 2-2 Wildcats 35-14 in front of 56,375 at Commonwealth Stadium.

The first was the seasoned starter, who after three inconsistent performances suddenly was finding off competition from an upstart freshman. Last week, the coach said he was behind him all the way. It was still his job to lose.

The other was the aspiring youngster, who impressed all who watched him last week with exciting — although at times erratic — play when called on to relieve the troubled veteran. His coach lauded him for an excellent performance, although he maintained that the upstart's man still was his starter. But there was some doubt in his words.

For the second week in a row, UK displayed two different offenses. One led by junior Brad Smith and one headed by redshirt freshman Pookie Jones. This week, the difference between the two was much more evident, leaving little doubt that UK will start the freshman next week against Mississippi State.

Still, UK head coach Bill Curry insisted a decision would not be made too quickly. But what happened in 60 minutes Saturday shifted Curry's confidence in Smith to insecurity and indecision.

"We won't make that decision right now," Curry said. "We'll have to study the situation."

Smith and Jones each led the offense for six possessions. Smith produced 106 yards of total offense and zero points. Jones moved the Cats 208 yards and put 14 points on the scoreboard.

The Cats made only three of their 27 first downs with Smith at the helm, and four of Smith's six possessions ended in punts — the other two fumbles. With Jones calling the signals, the UK offense scored two touchdowns. Jones completed 11 of 21 passes for 152 yards and ran the ball nine times for 77 yards, including an impromptu 51-yard scramble in the third quarter to set up UK's second score.

"I was extremely proud of Pookie," Curry said. "I thought he showed enormous poise along with his fantastic ability, which we already knew about."

The two different offenses brought a "Jekyll and Hyde" reaction from the fans. The only noise with Smith in the game were continual boos and a few "Pookie" chants, but Jones repeatedly was met with excitement every time he took a snap.

"That's something I don't normally even listen for," Curry said. "But in this case I did notice it because it was so obvious. With a local guy like that, who has had such great success and is so universally admired in his home state, I would think that's not unusual."

"People love Pookie Jones and they should. So they were glad to see him run out there, especially since we were struggling in all areas."

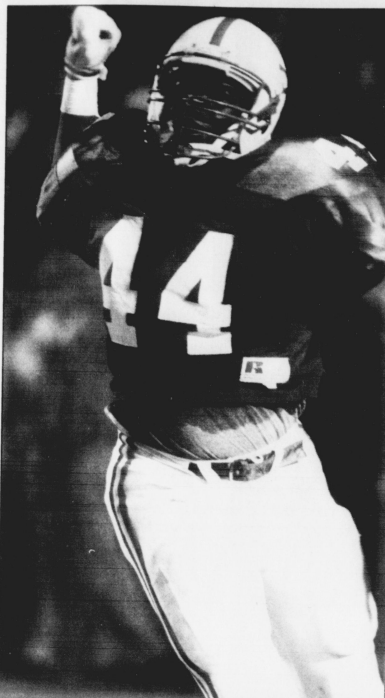

Jones said he wanted to prove something to himself, but he wasn't perfect.

"I've been waiting to see if I can do things I did in high school against SEC opponents," Jones said. "I felt like I could run really well against the SEC opponents. Ole Miss was a really good defense and I feel now that I can run against anybody."

"I felt really confident. I felt like I made some really good decisions. I know I made some bad decisions that I'm going to have to correct. I want to see to it that I do."

Jones added that he didn't know if he would get the starting job, but said, "I'm not going to punt about it if I don't start."

Jones wasn't the only diamond in the rough in the UK loss. Terry Sophomore fullback Terry Samuels celebrated after a first-half run Saturday night. Samuels rushed for 80 yards on 10 carries.

Samuels ran for 80 yards and a touchdown. Kurt Johnson caught five passes for 88 yards and a 52-yard kickoff return in the second quarter. Brad Armistead intercepted two passes — one in the end zone and one on the 3-yard line — to prevent what could have been a blowout.

Their performances were overshadowed by the fact that UK's offense couldn't seem to put the ball in the end zone down. Both teams made the big plays, but while UK was unable to capitalize on its chances, especially late in the game, the Rebels were.

"We got plenty of chances to be back in this game big time," Curry said. "And didn't cash in."

Junior guard Todd Perry said it didn't matter who was taking snaps, UK couldn't come through under pressure.

"I thought we were moving the ball very well until we got down to where it was money time and we had to put the ball in the end zone," Perry said. "We had trouble tonight. No matter how many yards you pile up you still have to get it in the end zone."

Mississippi rolled up 536 yards of total offense with quarterback

UK's faithful departed as substitute played on

The Mississippi Rebels' 21-point victory over the Wildcats Saturday night at Commonwealth Stadium can be explained by a simple formula expressing the essential nature of a football game.

The formula: Fans hoping to witness winning football must be disciples of a gift called faith. Fans content with losing football are ordinary men infected by a disease called common sense.

At Commonwealth Stadium Saturday night, most of the 56,375 some would call UK's faithful, failed to witness quarterback Pookie Jones give life to the gift that is faith. For with 5:08 remaining in the fourth quarter, the faithful had departed.

Commonwealth Stadium, the stadium that had granted UK 10 consecutive victories, was reduced to a vacant sea of gray, aluminum bleachers, shimmering in the lost magic of Saturday night lights. There was no allegiance. There was no unwavering adoration to loyalty. There was no faith.

Common sense is the unreflective opinion of ordinary men. It is sound and prudent judgement, but unsophisticated.

With UK trailing 28-14 with 5:08 remaining, it was sound and prudent judgment to leave the game early and secure a quick, hassle-free ride home, but it was unsophisticated.

The fans who stayed — those who did not leave early — must have believed in the power of forces unseen in faith.

Faith is believing in things when common sense tells you not to. It is complete trust in forces unseen, held without doubt or disbelief. Faith is a gift. These fans must have seen that Pookie Jones has that gift of faith. They must have seen that he is not an ordinary man.

"People love Pookie Jones and they should," Bill Curry said after the game. "I'm extremely proud of him. I thought he showed enormous poise to go along with his fantastic ability. ... He's quite a person."

Pookie Jones, a 6-foot-1, 192-pound redshirt freshman, props the ball over his right shoulder as if were a 10-pound medicine ball. Yet, he delivers it to his receiver like a pitcher throwing strikes to home plate. Saturday night, he completed 11 of 21 passes for 152 yards.

Tim WIESENHAHN

Still, there is more. Jones rushed for 77 yards on nine carries. His longest of 51 yards blessed the faithful.

With 6:21 remaining in the third quarter, UK had the ball on a second-and-10 from its own 48 yard line. Jones dropped back to pass. A slew of defenders flew by him as if caught in the breeze. Jones gathered himself and strode up field, guided by the path of the right hash marks. He churned past the 50, the 40, the 30. Once inside the 20, Jones made a tangent for right corner of the end zone. At the 5, he left the turf and achieved flight. His 51-yard romp ended 15 feet later as he landed just inches shy of six points and the goal line.

Six minutes later the blessing continued. Jones, on a broken fletcher, ran 23 yards more. The wonder brought the end of the third quarter. But there would be more.

On the final play of the game, Jones dropped back to pass, was flushed out of the pocket by the Mississippi rush, ran left and gained 7 yards. Although few saw, they marveled. Jones again had escaped the pain and loss of a sack. He had made something out of nothing.

Failure, wrote Roger Bannister (the first man to break the four-minute mile), is as exciting to watch as success, provided the effort is absolutely genuine and complete. Spectators often fail to understand the mental agony through which athlete must pass before they can give their maximum effort. And rarely can athletes give it, he said.

Jones' effort Saturday night was genuine and complete. His play was laden with conviction, resolution and even — fun. Did UK's fans leave early because they were not having fun? Or rather, did they leave because they lack the courage and the resolution faith requires? Did they fail to understand? Which formula tells the truth?

Volleyball team deals up wins

By GRAHAM SHELBY
Senior Staff Writer

Kathy DeBoer did more shuffling this weekend than a Las Vegas poker dealer.

The UK volleyball coach gave 12 of the 14 players on her roster court time as the Wildcats clubbed Wright State 3-0 and Western Kentucky 3-1 in a two-match home stand.

Freshmen Melody Sobczak and Krista Robinson were the cards Kentucky needed to complete a three-of-a-kind victory over Wright State 15-7, 15-7, 15-7.

Twenty-four times the pair sent the volleyball bouncing off the floor with kills that kept the tall State players wishing someone would say, "call."

Robinson proved to be a wild card herself, handing out six aces to the Raiders from the serve.

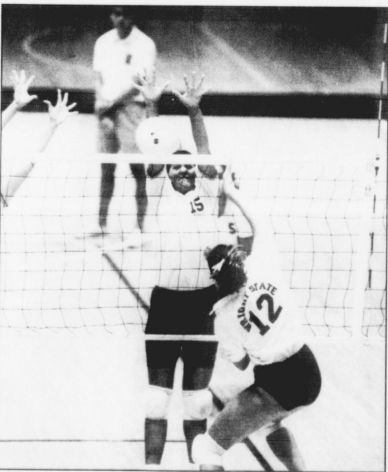

On Saturday the Cats got their card-shark routine backwards, showing their skills early and then later letting the competition get back into the game.

The Wildcats topped the Lady Toppers 15-2, 15-4 before DeBoer began shuffling her reserves into the lineup and Western wound up calling UK's bluff in the third game, cashing in with a 15-11 victory.

UK showed its hand — or more accurately its fist — in game four, royally flushing Western 15-2. DeBoer defended her game-three decision to discard the starters in favor of the reserves.

"Everyone who's on this team wants to play," she said. "We were in a situation where we were in control of the match."

Even when it looked like the gamble was going to cost the Cats, Outside hitter Melody Sobczak, a 6 foot freshman, went up for a block against Wright State. UK won 15-7, 15-7, 15-7.

DeBoer kept most of the replacements in the game. "Once you make the decision to put them in, you've got to let them feel their way," she said.

The Wildcats longtime ace, senior Cathy DeBuono, sat on the bench during the latter half of the third game — something she said she doesn't enjoy. "I hate going off the court."

While on the court, DeBuono totered 17 kills, more than enough to make her only the second player in UK history to notch more than 1,000 kills, placing her behind only former UK great and current CPA Lisa Bokovoy.

The Wildcats now have cashed in five straight victories and will try their luck next weekend at Alabama and Mississippi State.

Lacrosse: fastest game on two feet UK club team mixture of all sports

By ERNEST WRENTMORE
Contributing Writer
and TIM WIESENHAHN

Sporting events usually aren't held to settle Indian tribal disputes. They rarely are played by warriors running over miles of terrain with a knife in one hand and a long-handled stick with a triangular head with a loose mesh pouch for carrying, catching or throwing a ball in the other. But UK lacrosse isn't just another sporting event.

"It's the fastest game on two feet," said Terry Justice, UK's lacrosse coach. "It's the oldest American sport. It grabbed me by the tail."

Although UK's lacrosse club only plays with 11 athletes, without the knives, on a 60- by 110-yard field for four 15-minute periods, the stakes are just as high as in the game Indian warriors played for life and death.

"We are as competitive as any team we play," Justice said. "Year in and year out, we are one of the best team's in the Midwest."

"Running backs (from football) are well suited. It is ideal for defensive backs because of the hitting and transition."

UK is a member of the Midwestern Conference. It has won the conference championship eight times and has finished second the last two seasons.

UK's club plays a fall and spring schedule. Only tournaments are played in the fall. League play begins in the spring.

At UK's final tournament this weekend at Wright Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio, the Cats lost 9-6 to Bowling Green State and defeated Toledo 10-3 on Saturday. UK beat Glass City 9-6, but lost 6-5 in the semi-finals to Dayton on Sunday.

Justice, an engineering employee for the Lexington Fayette-Urban County Government, began playing lacrosse in 1979. UK's team has been club sport for 11 years. Lacrosse players must have the skills of football, basketball and hockey players, Justice said.

"It's like football, because of the hitting," he said. "Like basketball because of the transitions ... the pick-and-rolls, like hockey because of the fast pace and the sticks."

Three defenders, three midfielders, three attacks and one goalkeeper comprise a lacrosse team. Players wear helmets, shoulder pads, arm pads and a glove and may only hit from the waste up.

A lacrosse team tries to move what Justice called a "rubber superball that is slightly heavier than a baseball" down field through a series of short passes. The attacks swing the ball out to the wings and then collapse to the center, in front of the goal, in search of a shot. Players can hurl the ball more than 80 mph.

"Over half of our players had never seen the game before they began playing for UK," Justice said. "The most difficult thing for new players to learn is scooping the ball off the ground. It's like getting a rebound — like having a big 6-10 guy in the middle ... You don't have to be a big scorer, but getting rebounds is a must. Control the ground, you'll win the game."

Lacrosse traditionally is played by universities throughout the East. Many high schools and middle schools play lacrosse as well. Thus, UK's club team has several players from the East.

Freshman Phil Smith, who plays attack, is from Connecticut. Justice said UK gave Smith a chance to play competitive college lacrosse.

"We have been blessed," Justice said. "Phil is really skilled."

"One of the reasons I came to UK is because UK had a lacrosse team," Smith said.

Goalkeeper Mike Huffman is from Chicago and has played lacrosse for nearly seven years. The goalkeeper plays a unique role on the lacrosse team. He is responsible for beginning the offensive transition as well as defending the goal. Boyd Boggs is UK's starting goalie.

Justice said Boggs is the best goalie in the Midwest Conference — and Huffman is just as good. Boggs said he never picked up a lacrosse stick until he came to UK.

"We also use Boggs in attack position because he is a good

'Seinfeld' eschews 'romantic tension'

Toby GIBBS on TV

"Seinfeld" is one of the best current sitcoms on the air, for a variety of reasons.

It's very well written, first of all. The humor flows naturally from the situations and the characters, not from trite one-liners. The characters are distinct and likable. The star, stand-up comic Jerry Seinfeld, doesn't try to be anything he isn't. He plays a stand-up comic named Jerry Seinfeld. The supporting cast is terrific, the plots are inventive, etc.

The list of good things about "Seinfeld" goes on and on. But there's one thing about the show I especially like — something rare for television in this day and age: There's no on-again, off-again "romantic tension."

You know what I'm talking about — I'm talking about the over-used comic subplot on television today. I'm talking about Maddie and David ("Moonlighting"), Sam and Diane ("Cheers"), Sam and Rebecca ("Cheers" again), Tony and Angela ("Who's the Boss?"), Joel and Maggie ("Northern Exposure"), Hannah and Marty ("Anything But Love") and a variety of other shows that are under the delusion that this thing hasn't been done to death. This thing was dead on arrival.

How many times have you seen it? A man and woman, usually co-workers or neighbors, are forced to be around each other for prolonged periods of time. They argue (but in what's described as a "witty, sophisticated" kind of way) in almost every episode. But beneath the surface, a gritty "romantic tension" grows episode by episode, season by season. Viewers are teased and toyed with "will they ever get together?" magazines query. They kiss in one episode. They almost share their feelings in another. Season-ending cliff hangers leave us wondering if they finally will marry or break apart forever? Exciting, isn't it?

No, not really. It might have been years ago, when the first show did it (probably "Cheers"). But this viewer has seen it so many times — usually treated in the exact same manner — that I usually run the risk of yawning myself to death. There are major flaws in any such "romantic tension" subplot. Here are a few of them.

If the tension exists, it has to lead somewhere. It usually continues for years and years, getting staler as it is never resolved. "Who's the Boss" has been on the air for eight years (it seems like longer) and the two leads on that show still haven't gotten together. Eight years (or even two or three) is too long to hold my interest. After a few years, nobody cares anymore — especially if you barely cared in the first place.

If the tension doesn't continue forever, something has to happen. If they get together, the tension ends and boredom replaces it. Characters constantly have to be on the verge of breaking up just to keep interest alive, and that's as bad as the "romantic tension."

If characters get married or break apart forever, that changes the tone of the whole show. Marriages turn any sitcom into a domestic sitcom.

I have no earthly idea why shows continue to opt for this infernal "romantic tension." They all must think it is an essential ingredient in any show. But the opposite is true. To me, it's ruined more than one program. I loved "Moonlighting," until David and Maddie got together. After that, it was unwatchable. Every aspect of the show changed for the worse.

"Cheers" was once my favorite show. Even the "romantic tension" between Sam and Diane years ago worked well. (Probably the only example of the formula that has ever worked.) But the Sam and Rebecca thing, which changes from week to week with little rhyme or reason, has turned me off the show completely. The reruns are still wonderful. The new shows are hardly worth watching.

But I'm getting off the subject. "Seinfeld" eschews the entire "romantic tension" angle and has a platonic friendship between Jerry and Elaine, who is played by Julia Louis-Dreyfus. In fact, the two characters are former lovers, having broken up sometime before the show started airing. There was one episode in which they briefly became lovers again and flirted with the idea of dating, but by and large they have avoided the trap other shows so willingly step into. That's one of the strengths that "Seinfeld" has: It avoids the clichés everyone else embraces. As I noted earlier, "Seinfeld" has other positive qualities — qualities that are more important, I suppose — but the lack of phony "romantic tension" is a big plus.

For almost every other show on the air, though, the tension drags. God forbid the day should come when "romantic tension" exists between "Jake and the Fatman." Stay tuned.

Thomas denies allegations of sexual harassment

By PESTE YOST
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas "very forcefully" denied allegations by a law professor that he sexually harassed her when she worked for him a decade ago, a Republican senator said last night. And the White House dismissed the accusations as "unfounded."

But Democratic senators called the accusations very serious and two said a delay in tomorrow's scheduled confirmation vote might be necessary.

Thomas himself made no comment on the allegations by Anita Hill. The allegations were first disclosed by National Public Radio and Newsday.

The University of Oklahoma law professor told the Judiciary Committee last month that Thomas had detailed scenes from pornographic movies to her when she worked in the early 1980s as his legal assistant at the Department of Education and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, according to a source familiar with the allegations.

Hill told the committee Thomas had asked her out and when she refused, began to describe his sexual interests and the pornographic scenes, but he never touched her, the source said.

"I felt as though I did not have a choice, that the pressure was such that I was going to have to submit to that pressure in order to continue getting good assignments, being able to work and be comfortable in the work environment," Hill said in an interview with National Public Radio.

The committee did not disclose Hill's allegations publicly before sending Thomas' nomination to the full Senate late last month without recommendation. The committee told the White House of the accusations and a two-day FBI inquiry ensued.

While Thomas maintained his silence, the White House issued a statement saying it had "reviewed the (FBI) report and determined that the allegation was unfounded."

The White House said President Bush "continues to believe that Judge Thomas is eminently qualified to serve on the Supreme Court and expects him to be confirmed promptly."

A Senate vote is scheduled for tomorrow, and a majority of senators have indicated their support for Thomas, a conservative appeals judge who would become the second black to sit on the nation's highest court, succeeding the retired Justice Thurgood Marshall.

Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. (D-DeL), chairman of the Judiciary Committee, could not be reached for comment on Hill's allegations, or the committee's handling of it.

But Sen. Howard Metzenbaum (D-Ohio) called the allegations "very serious charges, very disturbing" and said the full Senate should review them before voting on Thomas' nomination. Metzenbaum spokeswoman Nancy Coffey said the senator thinks a possible delay of the confirmation vote "is definitely something that should be discussed."

Sen. Paul Simon (D-Ill.) hopes senators' questions on the matter can be addressed before tomorrow's scheduled vote, but if they cannot, he "believes it's important enough that it might be necessary to delay the vote," said Simon's press secretary, David Carle.

Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) said "obviously every senator should read this (FBI report) prior to his or her vote."

Hill issued a statement yesterday saying she was contacted initially by the committee staff on Sept. 3 "as someone who had worked with Thomas" and "after numerous discussions with Judiciary Committee staff, I decided to disclose that information about the alleged sexual harassment" to the committee only.

She said she subsequently submitted an affidavit to the committee and had no intention of making her allegations public until contacted by National Public Radio, which Hill said "had a copy of my sworn statement. ... I took the opportunity to respond to the information before it was publicized. At no time have I ever sought out the press to raise my concerns."

Committee Chairman Biden briefed all the panel's Democrats and virtually all the Republicans before the Sept. 27 vote, said Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah). If any committee member did not review the FBI report, it was simply because he didn't care to, Hatch said.

Before the 7-7 committee vote, in which Sen. Dennis DeConcini of Arizona was the sole Democrat to join the six Republicans in voting for Thomas, Biden publicly praised the nominee's character.

Republicans rallied around Thomas as last night.

Sen. John Danforth (R-Mo.) said the accusations are "more typical of a political campaign than of a Supreme Court nomination."

Danforth, Thomas' biggest Senate supporter, predicted the accusation will have no effect on the Senate vote.

One Judiciary Committee member, Sen. Arlen Specter (R-Pa.) said he had confronted Thomas about the accusations before voting for the judge in committee.

Specter said Thomas "very forcefully denied" Hill's allegations when the senator questioned the judge about it at the morning of the committee vote. He said he'd learned of Hill's accusations the previous day from another committee member.

Thomas said he had helped Hill get a job at Oral Roberts Law School where she previously worked, Specter said. Thomas also said Hill had called him last spring asking him to make a speech at a law school, Specter said.

"The lateness of the allegation, the absence of any touching or intimidation and the fact that she moved with him from one agency to another, I felt I had done my duty and was satisfied with his responses," Specter said.

Leahy, who read the FBI report, said Hill told the committee Thomas hired her as his personal assistant at the Education Department in 1981.

CNN shows tape of hostage Terry Anderson

By NEIL MacFARQUHAR
Associated Press

DAMASCUS, Syria — American hostage Terry Anderson, appearing healthier than in the past, said in a videotaped interview yesterday that his captors told him they would soon have "very good news" for the Western hostages.

The tape, obtained by the Cable News Network, was accompanied by a statement in Arabic signed by his Shiite Muslim captors, Islamic Jihad. The group said the tape was a continuation of the process that began with the release of Briton John McCarthy in August.

In the 12-minute tape, Anderson — who has been a captive for 6 1/2 years and is the longest-held Western hostage — described his joy upon hearing a radio broadcast of the daughter he has never seen and said the conditions of his captivity have improved in the past two years.

In the videotape, Anderson, 43, appeared calm, relaxed and alert, spoke in a strong voice and even laughed a few times.

"It looks like he has maintained a great sense of humor ... and a great sense of dignity," his sister Peggy Say, who has campaigned tirelessly for his release, told CNN after seeing part of the tape.

All captives should be freed, he said, not just Westerners but hundreds of Lebanese detainees.

Russ Shows completing 13 of 27 passes for 292 yards and ran 10 times for 56 yards. The Rebels averaged 7.9 yards per play.

Following a Damon Hood fumble late in the first quarter, Ole Miss set up 49 yards in three plays, including Show's 38-yard pass to Marvin Courtney.

Two plays later, Darron Billings sprinted 10 yards through a gaping hole for the score.

On the second play in the second quarter, Reggie Smith tipped a Shows' pass at the goal line and Armstead picked it off and returned it to the Ole Miss 45.

Much to the delight of the crowd, Jones entered the game for his first series at quarterback and handed off to Samuels, who ran for the touchdown.

Ole Miss responded by marching 80 yards on seven plays, with Billings running 13 yards for the score, to take a seven-point advantage.

Midway through the third quarter, with Smith at quarterback again, Clyde Radolph fumbled a pitch and Mississippi's Phillip Kent recovered at the UK 28. Shows threw to senior flanker Vincent Brownlee to score on the next play.

UK would score once more after Mississippi's Brian Lee missed a 48-yard field goal. On the fifth play of the series, Jones looked long, but found nowhere to throw.

After ducking one flying pass rusher and getting a great lead block at the line of scrimmage, Jones ran 51 yards, stumbling out of bounds at the goal line.

"I dove and when I went to get up, I looked at the two referees and they were just sitting there looking at each other like, 'What should I call?' But I felt I got in," Jones said.

On the next play, Craig Walker took the ball over the top to secure the touchdown.

Mississippi added two touchdowns in the fourth quarter — one on a 60-yard pass from Shows to Ty Montgomery and the other on a 26-yard pass from Tom Luke to Marvin Courtney.

scorer and hiter," Justice said. "We don't lose anything when Huffman is on the field."

Sophomore Mark Valentine is midfielder from Baltimore, which Justice called "a hotbed of lacrosse players." He said UK is "very blessed" to have Valentine on UK's team.

Midfielder John Bell, a marketing and economics senior, began playing lacrosse in 1988. As a midfielder, Bell must play offense and defense.

"The hardest thing for me was keeping concentration during the entire game," Bell said of his early matches. "The rest comes from your heart because you have to play yourself."

"In the Wright Patterson Air Force Tournament, we always come in sixth or seventh," Justice said. "Last year we finished third. We also just lost to Vanderbilt, the defending SEC (Southeastern Conference) league champs, 9-6. Although we lost, we played very tough."

Jesse Jackson visits the set of KSU's soap opera

The soap-operaic tragedy is still going on at Kentucky State University in Frankfort. But it appears it will come to a conclusion within the next 10 days.

The KSU Board of Regents meets this afternoon and likely will bring administrative charges against KSU President John T. Wolfe Jr. It is only a matter of time until he is fired and this debacle settles down.

The latest episode had the Rev. Jesse Jackson speaking at the school yesterday morning. The civil rights leader and former presidential candidate said he believes the regents and Wolfe can still reach "common ground."

The facts show otherwise. Wolfe has brought the wrath of the Board of Regents down on himself. He refused to cooperate with the board on appointing top administrators, he spent unauthorized funds on the presidential residence and he gave himself an almost 10 percent salary increase. He also planned a two-day inauguration for himself, but it was canceled last Friday by the regents, who then asked for Wolfe's resignation.

Wolfe has continued to ignore the board, while his supporters attempt to paint the board's actions as racially motivated.

Several board members are black, and they voted unanimously with the other regents to cancel his inauguration. Wolfe's supporters reacted to the vote by claiming black board members were being manipulated by former Gov. Louie Nunn, chairman of the board.

If the board were racist, one would think black board members and former Gov. Edward Breathitt, a white regent who during his term as governor was a pronounced civil rights supporter, would have presented this case to the media for public consumption.

Attempting to divert attention from his failings, Wolfe and his cadre argued that KSU's existence is at stake. There is absolutely no evidence that this is the case.

Jackson was wise not to take sides yesterday morning. And his call to keep KSU's cultural tradition should be heeded.

Jackson called Nunn and told him Wolfe resented having his integrity questioned. If Wolfe would exhibit some, then it probably would not be called into question.

The Board of Regents has called a special meeting for today, in which it will give Wolfe his chance to resign. If he refuses — which he probably will — the board most likely will fire him. The board must do what it must do, and maybe soon KSU can get back to the business of educating students.

Register to vote: Democracy needs you today

Democracy is a fragile system that can be destroyed if no one participates in it. The primary mode of participation is the actual act of voting. Today is the last day to register to vote for this year's fall election.

This year's fall election will be concerned primarily with electing state officers who will serve for the next four years. Included in the slate of officers is the chief executive's post, the governorship.

The race between Democrat Brereton Jones and Republican Larry Hopkins looks to be an interesting one between two political heavyweights. If you have been complaining about the people who elected Gov. Wallace Wilkinson, you'll have no room to gripe for the next four years if you don't vote in the November election.

Registering now will also make you ready for this spring's presidential primary season.

So take a few minutes and go down to the Fayette County Clerk's Office (255-7563 or 253-3344) and fill out a voter registration form. Democracy doesn't work without voters.

University Studies Program inadequate

UK instituted a new system of core course requirements called the University Studies Program during fall 1988, which replaced the old General Studies system. New core requirements were intended to give UK students a foundation for more specialized course work at the University. The University Studies Program, in that respect, is a complete failure.

There is absolutely no coherence to the system. It is a hodgepodge of courses seemingly thrown together at random, with no unifying theme tying them together.

The most glaring weaknesses in the program are in the social science and humanities requirements. Only six hours (two classes) are required in each area. And with the choice of classes listed, they may as well not even bother.

To satisfy the social science requirement, you can take a myriad of useless politically correct classes such as: Sociology 235: Inequality in Society; or Women's Studies 200: Introduction to Women's Studies in the Social Sciences. Those crucial courses can be substituted with equally important classes like: General Agriculture 101: The Economics of Food and Agriculture; and Geography 222: Cities of the World. The overall silliness award is a tie between General Agriculture 102: The Dynamics of Rural Social Life and the sappy Sociology 152: Modern Social

N. Alan CORNETT

Problems. I can hear Alan Alda crying already.

The real shame about the humanities requirements is that only two courses are required. Every student at the University should take at least one course in art and music (with theatre as a possible substitute). And at least three courses should be demanded in history, literature and philosophy.

The latest issue of Campus magazine examines the core curriculum at the University of Dallas, and its system certainly is a good example of what UK should strive to adopt.

Michael L. Coulter writes: "A minimum of 66 credit hours are required as part of the core: a four-course sequence called 'Literary Tradition,' which studies the literature of the ancient Greeks to the early 20th century (this is similar to UK's Honors Program); four philosophy courses, including three required courses on metaphysics, ethics and the philosophy of man and one course related to the student's major; two courses each in American and Western civilization; three courses (total) in mathematics and the fine arts; and two theology courses. Each student also must take enough classes to be proficient in a foreign language."

The motto of the University of Dallas is "Where ideas still count;" UK's is "A tradition of value." I think we can see the difference in approach.

The basis for all knowledge of the soul and spirit is contained within the humanities. And the way to gain knowledge of them is through a liberal arts education. That is not what the students at UK are getting.

UK is the only public institution in Kentucky with a statewide mission. The University is supposed to offer the best students in the state the training and education to be leaders and thinkers. That's not happening with our University Studies requirement. A more stringent system of course will preclude many from coming to UK, but the function of the University is to focus on quality, not quantity. Not everyone is college material, but those who are should be treated as such.

With all fairness to those who worked out the University Studies program — especially Dean of Undergraduate Studies Louis Swift, a true friend and lover of the humanities — the competing and diverse departments on campus try to make it difficult to design a proper core program. If a department can get some of its courses listed as ones that fill University Studies requirements, more students automatically take them. Because of this, the department receives more funding and it must hire more faculty, therefore making it a more powerful department on campus. These departments do not have the good of the students at heart, but rather the academic politics of the University.

As Russell Kirk writes, "I do not believe it to be the primary function of formal schooling to 'prepare boys and girls for jobs.' ... Rather, I believe it to be the conservative mission of liberal learning to develop right reason among young people. ... The function of liberal education is to conserve a body of received knowledge and to impart an apprehension of order to the rising generation."

The University of Kentucky cannot do an adequate job of this with its current University Studies Program. If individual departments will not put aside their petty vanities and agree on their proper roles in the University, the administration must act to ensure that UK fulfills its proper mission. And if the administration won't do it, maybe the Board of Trustees will have to direct it to do so. Whoever has enough responsibility to act needs to. We cannot long countenance mediocrity.

All black schools were merely discussed

To the editor:

Since A. Thomas Horton, a journalism senior, has chosen to respond to an article that provided much discussion by the Lexington NAACP and the community, I think it important that Horton realize that he does not have all the facts.

As vice president of the local NAACP branch, I am obligated to respond to questions and attacks. And as a journalism student, Horton must realize that everything he reads is not necessarily what was said in context as it is written.

In the Friday, Sept. 27 Kentucky Kernel, I am quoted as "urging the community to get involved with the project." "The project" I was referring to was the monthly Town Meetings that the local branch hosts. All black schools just happen to be the focused topic of the last (September) Town Meeting.

I have expressed my opinion on all male black schools and if you had asked me, you would know that I am not in favor of the concept. One of my many reasons is that I do not think that the best teacher for black males is black males. There are other reasons, but I think, for now, this will do.

Surely, one would not think that a good education would keep people from committing crimes — just look at the S&L crises, the BCCI scandal — these crimes were committed by men who probably went to private schools. Did I say something about that in my previous paragraph?

Anyway, there are many reasons for making our present schools and administrators compatible, capable and willing participants in the teaching and learning process. It's just a matter of all of us "working together as a team."

Africa was the cradle of civilization

To the editor:

Dear Bryan Martin. Let me begin by saying that there is a difference between anger and truth. If anger were as deeply embedded in my heart as you would claim, I would have already burned your house down. What I speak of is the truth. As far as fact? The wording of the Emancipation Proclamation stated that all slaves that were in "armed rebellion" were freed. In other words, those who fought against the South, not the slaves held by your "forefathers" in other parts of the country. Ivan van Sertima, in a testimony before Congress conclusively proved that Christopher Columbus did not discover America. Socrates and his contemporaries traveled in Africa to attain the knowledge they espoused. The cradle of civilization was not in Rome but in Africa. Eve was a black woman. Jesus was a black man. When you decide you want more information on the true face of history, look me up in the Martin Luther King Jr. Cultural Center.

As to why whites are criticized, I could write volumes. Blacks and Hispanics kill each other with guns in Los Angeles over drugs. Who owns the planes that fly drugs into the country? Who manufactures the guns and allows them to be sold in the back of hardware stores? How do drugs get from South America to Watts? How many of those blacks and Hispanics that you mentioned own the planes, have the money or the clout to get the drugs into the country? You want me to believe that you can keep Cuban cigars out of the country but not drugs?

Martin, I have not the time nor the energy to give you a lesson in sociology or economics.

As to what Jesus said, he states: "Isaiah prophesied rightly about you hypocrites, as it is written, 'This people honors me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; in vain do they worship me, teaching human precepts as doctrines.'"

When you, Martin, have done more than simply washed your own hands of guilt, when you see something that is wrong and you do something about it, then you can say you have done something.

Because as much as you want to deny it, you and your people are where you are today because you are standing high on the bones of every ethnic group in the world.

Articles on cheating shows systems failings

To the editor:

At the beginning of the year, I served as a fall orientation leader for incoming freshmen. I am sure that those in my group remember me explaining how no matter what their behavior in high school, they had best not cheat in college as penalties are severe. It seems as though the college deans and administrators have made a liar out of me. I was unpleasantly surprised to learn of the difficulties a professor has in prosecuting and adequately penalizing a student suspected of or known to have been cheating.

I would like to thank the Kentucky Kernel for highlighting the inadequacies of the current system and implore professors, deans and administrators to explore making some revisions. And to my fall orientation group: Though the penalties may not be severe, above all else, cheating remains immoral, wrong and a waste of your tuition. I encourage you to resist the temptation.

Hemenway

Hemenway said he will discuss the progress of his campus agenda, which he announced in his first address two years ago.

The agenda includes increasing research, improving teaching, internationalizing the campus, developing human resources and setting priorities.

Hemenway cited that 32 percent of total tenure-track faculty hires in the past two years have been women, which is significant because it is greater than the percentage of women faculty currently employed, he said. He plans to propose a goal of 40 percent women in future hiring.

Hemenway also touted a tour of state for new faculty, started this year.

"It's just a good way to get people to understand the relation between the University and the Commonwealth," he said.

He also cited his innovation and excellence fund provides money to departments and colleges for needs and new ideas.

Some have criticized the plan because it is funded by a tax on each acre of the Lexington Campus, which amounts to 1 percent of the campus' base budget.

Some criticisms were that the fund placed new programs over basic needs. Hemenway called that "a misunderstanding of the program."

Hemenway said basic needs also can be requested. He said the fund's effect on individual budgets shouldn't be significant.

"Basic programs should not be affected by whatever budget adjustments that you make," he said.

Hemenway also cited the Jewell

Hall international living center, $3,000 awards for faculty for teaching, the UK 101 class to introduce freshmen to UK and the University's involvement in the Kentucky Educational Reform Act.

Also, Hemenway said he will ask the audiences for their ideas on the issues of tomorrow.

"I'm most interested in getting the campus' ideas on where do we go from here," he said. "How do we make this a better University? What are the things we need to be concerned about? What priorities do we need to communicate as a campus (in order) to be successful?"

Since the Reagan Administration, the media have served as pro-government mouthpieces. Reagan was an actor, and someone wrote his scripts, and they were "the big corporations who wanted deregulation, tax breaks and build-up of the military-industrial complex," Kellner said.

The takeovers of NBC by General Electric and ABC by Capital Cities Communications in the 1980s were major steps toward control of media sources by big business. These takeovers went against Federal Anti-Trust laws and the Federal Communications Commission's mission to ensure that broadcasting "served the public needs. All of this went out the window during the Reagan Administration. GE was one of the biggest producers of nuclear weapons, airplanes and military equipment," he said.

The 1988 presidential election was also a deliberate "disinformation" campaign, Kellner said. "There were all these relative stories to the 1988 elections in the alternative press ... about Bush and the CIA, Bush and Iran-contra, Bush and Noriega, story after story that was not touched by the mainstream media," he said.

Ted Schatzki, UK philosophy department, said Kellner is "one of the leading voices of critical theory today."

He said the Persian Gulf War furthered "the capitalist hegemony over the media and the impoverishment of democracy in today's America."

The program was organized by Schatzki, German professor Wolfgang Natter and geography professor John Paul Jones. The committee will sponsor a spring lecture series at UK.

confused at exactly what we were trying to do, and if you noticed what everybody was saying was basically on the same pattern — keeping K-State's primary mission — and focus on following that."

"I think its putting the focus back on the students where it belongs," said Kesha Stone, SGA president at KSU.

She also said SGA has tried to contact former Gov. Louie Nunn, the KSU board chairman, but Nunn has refused to meet with them.

"I think he's trying to avoid the students and their concerns and his concerns are elsewhere and not with the university," she said.

The Board of Regents meets today at 1 on KSU's campus.

ceed in class, a survey released yesterday shows. The finding, contained in a teacher opinion poll commissioned by Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.,

raised fresh doubts about the prospects of achieving national educational goals agreed upon two years ago by President Bush and the nation's governors.

The first of those goals aims at ensuring that by the year 2000, all children arrive at school "ready to learn."
