'WHISPERS' ON CABLE TV

Many months of waiting has finally paid off. GSO has been able to get the 'Whispers' Video to appear on Cable TV. The rights for this video were purchased almost a year ago by GSO and it has been shown locally by Churches, Counselors, Educators, and at many GSO Functions. The Cable showing will be the first opportunity for it to be viewed by the community at large, hopefully reaching many that may benefit from its content.

The 'Whispers' Video is about a young man who is dealing with his sexuality, eventually to come out to himself, his family, and friends (including his girlfriend). All the tension and emotions of making each of these hurdles is very well expressed in this video. Each of us will see some part of ourselves. This is a must see if you have not viewed it.

There will be a preview showing and discussion of 'Whispers' at the next GSO Forum on October 7th, 8:00pm. The times and dates of the cable showings are listed in this months issue of the GSO Calendar. They will be on Telecable Channel 6, primarily between the 7th and 13th of October. Watch the Telecable Programming for additional times and days throughout October.

AEROBICS II

Another 6 weeks of aerobics, sponsored by GSO, will begin October 14th. The classes are on Mondays and Wednesdays at 8:00pm and Fridays at 7:00pm. The classes are held at the Workout Workshop in Woodhill Shopping Center. The entire 6 weeks of classes is a low $25.00 if you pre-register by October 12th, or $30.00 on the first night of classes. You also have the option of paying $3.00 on a night by night basis. Class size is limited, so register early.

IN THE STILL OF THE NIGHT....

GSO's fifth annual fall camping trip will be on Saturday, October 12th and Sunday, October 13th on Eddie's farm in Saddieville, Kentucky. This is always one of our most popular events and usually draws people from both Lexington and Louisville, so mark your calendar now and don't miss this exciting weekend. Plan to arrive any time after 3:00pm. Bring your dinner and breakfast. This is primitive camping, (no facilities), and you should be prepared for fall temperatures! Come out and share our bon fire and lots of good company! In case of rain, this trip will be held on October 19th. For more information, call Eddie at 259-0878 or Jim and John at 299-0352. Directions: Take I-75 North to the Saddieville exit, then follow the map below.

SONG OF LOVE

Two young lovers caress and kiss each other, dancing their song of love.

The glimmering moonlight dances in their eyes, and each kiss brings them closer; not a word is spoken, for them it is not necessary.

Two young bodies, their blood runs hot as they consummate each others love. No need for words, for the night proves everything.

For a brief moment in their life, there is no need for explanation, for alone, there is no one to question or comment.

Their tenderness proves out the night, and soon it is over. Reality creeps in like a black fog, and again they must assume a life without dancing their song of love.

Two young lovers, deserving to be with each other, must be apart to satisfy others. Surely the biggest sin of all is the best intention of others which can hurt the most.

Two young lovers, who can no longer dance with each other, their beautiful song of love.

ASK AUNT MARY

Dear Aunt Mary: Bill and I have been together for almost five years and I have always thought of our relationship as happy. About three weeks ago, Bill mentioned that he had hired a new secretary. About two weeks ago he said he was going to have to work late every night and put in some office time on the weekends for an indefinite period of time. Last week when I had occasion to call Bill at the office, a male voice answered the phone and identified himself as Bill's secretary. I have never been the suspicious kind before, but must admit to feeling very uneasy about just what Bill is up to while I'm at home watching TV and waiting up for him. What do you think?

Tired of Dynasty

Dear Tired: A gay man who is tired of Dynasty? Is this a gag letter or what? What do I think? Well, I guess I think its about time to drop by Bill's office, take a good look at his secretary, find out if he can type, and then ask Bill to join you for dinner to discuss the situation. Meanwhile, while you are building up your courage, maybe I can suggest a few new TV programs I find particularly enjoyable.

Aunt Mary

Organs of the immune system

THE IMMUNE SYSTEM:

part one

At the center of the AIDS issue is the highly complex immune system. The current health crisis has produced an overwhelming amount of information -- much of which is new to many of us. As a result, much of the terminology is likewise new. The following article is first in a series on how the system works and its components. It was prepared by the Office of Research, Reporting and Public Response of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

INTRODUCTION

The immune system is a complex network of specialized organs and cells that has evolved to defend the body against attacks by "foreign" invaders. When it malfunctions, however, it can unleash an enormous variety of diseases, from allergy to arthritis to cancer.

The immune system evolved because we live in a sea of microbes. Like man, these organisms are programmed to perpetuate themselves. The human body provides an ideal habitat for many of them and they try to break in; because the presence of these organisms is often harmful, the immune system will attempt to bar their entry or, if they succeed in getting in, to seek them out and destroy them.

The immune system, which equals in complexity the intricacies of the brain and nervous system, displays several remarkable characteristics. It is able to distinguish between "self" and "nonself". It is able to remember previous experiences and react accordingly: once you have had the mumps, your immune system will prevent you from getting it again. The immune system displays both enormous diversity and extraordinary specificity: not only is it able to recognize many millions of "nonself" molecules, it can produce molecules to match up with and counteract each one of them. And it has at its command a sophisticated array of weapons.

The success of this system in defending the body depends on an incredibly elaborate and dynamic regularity -communications network. Millions and millions of cells, organized into sets and subsets, pass information back and forth like clouds of bees swarming around a hive. The result is a sensitive system of checks and balances that produces an immune response that is prompt, appropriate, effective, and self-limiting.

ANTIGENS

An antigen is any substance -- any of the millions of "nonself" molecules -- that can trigger an immune response because the body recognizes it as foreign. A molecule announces itself as "self" or "nonself" by means of intricate and characteristic shapes, called epitopes, that protrude from its surface. Almost all antigens carry several different kinds of epitopes -- some may carry several hundred -- but some epitopes will be more effective than others at stimulating an immune response.

An antigen can be a virus, a bacterium, a fungus, or a parasite, or even a portion or product of one of these organisms. Tissues or cells from another individual, unless it is an identical twin, can also act as antigens; because a transplanted organ is seen as "foreign", the body's natural response is to reject it. The body will even reject nourishing proteins unless they are first broken down, by the digestive system, into their primary building blocks.

In abnormal situations, the immune system can wrongly identify "self" as "nonself". The result can be a so-called autoimmune disease, such as rheumatoid arthritis or systemic lupus erythematosus.

In certain persons, an apparently harmless substance, such as ragweed pollen or cat hair, can provoke the immune system to set off the inappropriate and harmful response known as allergy; in these cases the antigens are known as allergens.

THE ORGANS OF THE IMMUNE SYSTEM

The organs of the immune system are stationed throughout the body. They are generally referred to as "lymphoid" organs, because they are concerned with the growth, development and deployment of lymphocytes, the white cells that are the key operatives of the immune system. Lymphoid organs include the bone marrow, the thymus, the lymph nodes, and the spleen, as well as the tonsils, the appendix, and clumps of lymphoid tissue in the small intestine known as Peyer's patches.

Cells that are destined to become lymphocytes are produced in the bone marrow, the soft tissue in the hollow shafts of the long bones. Some of these cells, known as stem cells, migrate to the thymus, a multilobed organ that lies high behind the breastbone. There they multiply and mature into cells capable of producing an immune response -- that is, they become immunocompetent.

Stem cells that develop in the thymus are called T cells. Other lymphocytes, which appear to mature either in the bone marrow itself or in lymphoid organs other than the thymus, are called B cells.

Lymph nodes are small bean-shaped structures that are laced throughout the body. Strings of lymph nodes can be found in the neck, armpits, abdomen, and groin.

Each lymph node contains a variety of specialized compartments. Some compartments house B cells, others contain T cells. Yet others are filled with another type of immune cell, the macrophage. Lymph nodes also contain webbed areas that enmesh antigens. Thus, the lymph node brings together the several actors needed to produce an immune response. Lymph nodes are linked by a network of lymphatic vessels similar to the blood vessels. Like a system of small creeks and streams that empty into larger and larger rivers, the vessels of the lymphatic network merge into increasingly larger tributaries. At the base of the neck, the large lymphatic ducts empty into the bloodstream.

The lymphatic vessel carry lymph, a clear fluid that bathes the body's tissues. Lymph contains many cells, most of them lymphocytes.

Lymph and the cells and particles it carries, including antigens that have entered the body, drain out of the body's tissues, seeping through the thin walls of the smallest lymphatic vessels. As the lymph passes through lymph nodes, antigens are filtered out and more lymphocytes are picked up. The lymphocytes, along with other assorted cells of the immune system, are carried to the bloodstream, which delivers them to tissues throughout the body. The lymphocytes patrol everywhere for foreign antigens, then gradually drift back into the lymphatic system, to begin the cycle all over again.

During their travels, circulating lymphocytes may spend several hours in the spleen, an organ in the abdomen that contains a high concentration of lymphocytes. Persons whose spleens have been damaged by trauma or by diseases such as sickle cell anemia are very susceptible to infection.

SCIENTISTS PESSIMISTIC ON VACCINE FOR AIDS

Associated Press

New York--Researchers who have deciphered the genetic code of a sheep virus thought to be similar to the AIDS virus say the two viruses are indeed closely related and share features that make the development of an AIDS vaccine unlikely.

"It's kind of depressing," said one of the scientists, Dr. Ashley Haase of the University of Minnesota.

"It means that vaccines and anti-body treatments may not be effective -- in fact, they probably won't be," he said in a telephone interview. A report of the findings was published in the August issue of the journal Cell.

In January, researchers at the National Cancer Institute reported a preliminary finding that the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus and the visna virus, which causes pneumonia and nervous system ailments in sheep, were similar.

Haase, working with Simon Wain-Hobson of the Pasteur Institute and others, have now determined the precise chemical sequence of the visna virus' genes.

"The upshot of that is there are areas of great similarity between the AIDS virus and the lentiviruses," the family of viruses to which visna virus belongs, Haase said.

He said he was pessimistic about the search for an AIDS vaccine because lentiviruses can cause quiet infections for years before erupting into serious illness. Robert Gallo of the National Cancer Institute, one of the discoverers of the AIDS virus, disagreed with Haase's assessment.

Matthew Gonda and colleagues at the cancer institute also will soon report independent identification of the genetic sequence of the visna virus, Gallo said.

Haase said both viruses contain a genetic segment that appears to slow down vira reproduction.

Both viruses also may share a property called transactivation that allows them to reproduce at a rate 1,000 times faster, Haase said.

William Haseltine of the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston, who discovered the transactivation property in the AIDS virus, said he was skeptical of a report that the same property exists in visna virus.

RULE REQUIRES DOCTORS TO REPORT MORE SEX DISEASES

Associated Press

Frankfort--A new regulation requires Kentucky physicians to report more types of sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS, as state health officials try to determine the rate at which they are spreading.

The regulation, submitted by the Cabinet for Human Resources, took effect upon approval by the legislature's Administrative Regulation Review Subcommittee.

It also requires physicians to report all cases of genital herpes and the bacterial diseases -- chlamydia infections -- that are a leading cause of pelvic inflammatory disease, tubal pregnancies and infertility, said Dr. Ward Hinds, the director of the cabinet's epidemiology division.

All are classified by the cabinet as sexually transmitted diseases, although they can be communicated in other ways, Hinds said.

Formal reporting "will give us a much better handle on the extent and geographic spread" of the diseases and will relieve doctors of "legal problems of (patient) confidentiality," Hinds said.

Twenty-seven cases of AIDS have been diagnosed in Kentucky, and twenty-two of the victims of the virus have died, Hinds said.

Less is known about the extent of genital herpes, but "it is suspected" that the viral disease has reached epidemic proportions in Kentucky, Hinds said. Formal reporting will determine that, he said.

Chlamydia infections are "at least as common as gonorrhea, probably more common," Hinds said.

Some doctors had been reporting AIDS cases to the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, and reports gradually filtered back to Frankfort, Hinds said. The cabinet began about two years ago to solicit direct reports through notices in a monthly newsletter to physicians, he said.

Although you can never be certain that all cases of AIDS were reported before it was required, "we believe we've had very good cooperation from physicians in reporting" the disease, Hinds said.

Because there is no cure for AIDS or genital herpes, neither the state nor the CDC in Atlanta now tries to notify the sexual partners of a diagnosed victim, Hinds said.

"That responsibility falls to a large extent on the ... victim himself," he said.

However, the CDC is financing a study to determine whether such follow-ups would make a difference in the spread of the diseases, particularly AIDS, Hinds said.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann: Please allow me to comment on the letter from the woman who found that her husband was attracted to men as well as to her. She was worried about what would happen to their two sons if they "learned the truth about their father in future years."

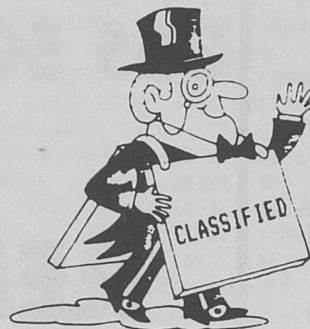

Homosexuality is a fact of life. It has been with us through the ages, in all cultures and at all social and economic levels. It is not going to go away, so we had better try to understand it.

We still do not know the cause of homosexuality. Some of the theories are reasonable, but many are ridiculous. But whether it is a result of environment or heredity or both, one thing is clear: Homosexuals do not cause their own homosexuality. They are either born that way or are molded early in life by circumstances over which they have no control. Sometimes, as in the case of the husband mentioned, it does not surface until maturity, when the veneer of social pressure to conform has worn thin.

We will never know how many happily or unhappily married public figures, doctors, lawyers, clergy, dowagers, athletes, "frigid" wives, truck drivers and countless others are attracted to members of their own sex. You may be sure, however, that there is a good percentage of the population forced by society to remain "in the closet." We will never know how many ulcers, cases of alcoholism, heart attacks, divorces or suicides have been caused by the suppression of "the love that dare not speak its name." --A.C. in D.C.

Dear A.C. in D.C.: Thank you for a good letter. It is factually correct, and I am pleased to print it. -- Ann Landers

PHONELINE VOLUNTEERS CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE

Everyone has those moments when they need someone to talk to, but imagine what it would be like if there was no one you could confide in, ask advice of, or simply chat with when you are experiencing that need. Many of our callers are in that very situation, desperately needing to talk to another person who is gay, wondering just what it means to be gay, or maybe just to share the pain of being different with someone who might understand. For many individuals their first call to the GSO Phoneline may be the first step in coming out and learning to deal with their sexual identity. As a Phoneline listener, you can make a real difference in someone's life. Most everyone can spare a few hours each month, and this extremely worthwhile project needs your help. If you would like more information about how to volunteer to take part in one of GSO's most important projects, call Barry at 268-3935.

Spiced Apple Cider

Pour a half-gallon of sweet cider into a large pot. Add one half pound of brown sugar, one half teaspoon of whole cloves, one and a half cinnamon sticks, one and a half teaspoons of ground allspice, one fourth teaspoon salt and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Mix it all up, bring to a boil and simmer for fifteen minutes. Serve hot in mugs. This makes 12 ample servings.
