

Holidays

Hey, Sweetheart

Of the holidays that are commonly celebrated, which has a greater rift between love and hate than Valentine's Day? Either you love it because you will get gifts, hate it because you have to buy gifts or despise it because you will do neither. Here are some ideas for what to do for your sweetheart on Valentine's Day. A list of alternative ideas will be in today's paper.

OK - Order pizza and get a 12-pack of your Valentine's favorite import. Nothing says "I love you" better than some Heineken. Light the candle that usually stays in the bathroom.

Good - Take her to a romantic dinner at her favorite restaurant and tell her how much you care about her. There's nothing like a big steak and a salad to tempt the tastebuds of the one you truly care about.

Romantic - Invite her over, having already prepared a four course Italian meal with wine, candles and a gift that includes something from the heart (or diamonds). Diamonds are, after all, everyone's best friend.

OK - Sit back and let your Valentine take care of you, and show your appreciation. You show your appreciation by taking care of your Valentine, too.

Good - Buy your Valentine something that they would not buy for herself, but something they wish they had.

Romantic - Give your Valentine a backrub, cook them a gourmet meal, and see what's on the Spice channel.

OK - Give your Valentine a ring.

Good - Give your Valentine a ring with her birthstone.

Romantic - Give your Valentine an engagement ring in a really romantic way. I would share ideas, but if someone were to use the same idea, whether they had the idea before or not, they would be considered a schmuck for doing what the rail guy suggested.

Mumme maintains innocence

Recruits: Guidugli re-evaluating decision to come to UK

By Patrick Avery
ASSISTANT SCENE EDITOR

Former UK football coach Hal Mumme said in a statement released Wednesday he did not have any involvement in the football program's NCAA rule violations.

"These things did occur on my watch and as the person in charge I felt it best for the program at UK that I take responsibility and resign," Mumme said in the statement. UK Athletics Director Larry Ivy announced Tuesday that Hal Mumme had issued his resignation. Ivy then announced that former UK offensive line coach Guy Morriss would be the new UK football head coach.

Mumme said in his statement that he wished to thank all of the people at UK for a wonderful four years.

"In spite of the turmoil of the last few weeks, we will always cherish our time in the commonwealth," Mumme said.

Ivy mentioned at the news conference Tuesday that he was concerned about potential UK recruits.

"We hope that the student-athletes who have committed to us have committed to the University of Kentucky," Ivy said, "but if there are any who have committed to play for Hal Mumme, we wanted them to have the opportunity to make that change if necessary."

Mumme's resignation has not rattled Taylor Begley, a UK football recruit.

"I talked with coach Mumme once or twice but I didn't really know him all too well," said Begley, a former Boyle County football player.

Begley said he is confident that Morriss and his coaching staff will do a good job for the football program.

However one possible UK recruit might change his mind about committing to UK. According to the football recruiting web site Rivals.com, Gino Guidugli, a quarterback from Highlands High School in Ft. Thomas, Ky., announced Monday that he was attending UK.

Guidugli's father Dale said his son was going to re-evaluate his decision.

Head coach Guy Morriss and defensive coordinator will discuss football signees at a news conference today at 2:30 p.m. in the Wildcat Den in Commonwealth Stadium.

RELATIONSHIPS

Breaking up is hard to do

It's over: Tips on how to mend a broken heart

By Kelly Sweger
STAFF WRITER

"Tis better to have loved and lost, than to never have loved at all."

Students mending a broken heart may say Shakespeare was wrong.

Couples enjoy coupledom on Valentine's Day, but for anyone that recently broke up, a conversation heart saying, "Bite me," sounds more appropriate than anything romantically sappy.

For a serious (probably at least six months) monogamous relationship to have ended, it can be compared to that of grieving over the death of a loved one, said Mary Bolin-Reece, director of the Counseling and Testing Center. Elizabeth Kubler-Ross' book, On Death and Dying, describes five stages associated with mourning.

These stages are denial and isolation, anger, bargaining, depression and acceptance.

Bolin-Reece said she can see these stages in responses to loss in relationships or other unwanted life changes. However, she said not everyone will experience these stages in that order or may happen to cycle back through them several times.

After a breakup she suggests having a support group that will listen and not try to "solve the problem," keeping a journal to express thoughts and emotions, exercising and paying special attention to healthy practices such as getting quality sleep.

The idea of exercising isn't new, but be creative in your methods. Try kickboxing, golfing or a new hobby.

Refrain from rebounding too. Rebounding only masks the grief from the previous relationship and delays closure.

One sign of depression from a broken heart is loss of appetite, said Mary Bolin-Reece, the director of the Counseling and Testing Center. Getting over a broken heart can take up to a year.

Also, Bolin-Reece said one should remember that men and women deal with emotions differently. While the girls may go watch a chick flick with all her closest pals, the guys may head to the bar for some brews.

Signs of depression include disturbances in sleep, eating habits, frequent fatigue, trouble concentrating and a lowering of self-esteem.

According to Bolin-Reece, the worst scenario is when a person considers inflicting personal physical harm because he or she feels they have lost the only person that gave life meaning.

"Create some ritual to mark the end of the relationship," Bolin-Reece said.

Some people resort to burning old love letters or even just taking down photos of the past loved one.

A good indicator of when to date again is when one's ex no longer brings up strong feelings and the relationship as a whole is intermixed into one's life experience. Bolin-Reece said there is no set amount of time for how long to grieve or get over a relationship fully.

"In a long-term relationship of a year or more, I would expect that it may take a year cycle to move through all the annual events like anniversaries and holidays," Bolin-Reece said.

SGA court shoots down Glenn's claims

No good: Supreme Court votes 4-1 against Glenn

By Jenny Robertson
DIALOGUE CO-EDITOR

In every Student Government internal scuffle this term, Jimmy Glenn has been on the defensive; but Wednesday, the President played prosecutor, taking the senate chairman before the SGA Supreme Court.

Josh Robinson, one of the Supreme Court Justices, said after Wednesday night's meeting, the court voted 4-1 to deny Glenn's claim for injunctive relief. The court deemed that Senate Chairman Edwin Orange did not violate the SGA Constitution when he called an emergency meeting on Nov. 29 to approve amendments.

"This means the new Constitution and election rules are in effect," Robinson said of the decision.

The newly amended Constitution, drafted by Robinson and Michael Walker, another Supreme Court Justice, created what Robinson called a conflict of interest for both Supreme Court Justices because he said they were both involved with the constitutional revisions of the document. These justices did not vote because they feared some might say they were biased.

"It gave the appearance of impropriety, and we felt like it was better for that not to become an issue," Robinson said.

Robinson said it was a big deal to him because if either of the two voted otherwise, it wouldn't have rendered the decision in Glenn's favor.

Glenn argued at the trial that the public was not properly notified of the meeting. He also said that constitutional amendments should not have been decided at an emergency meeting, and that the Senate ignored his executive order to gain student input before passing the amendments.

Charlie Tichenor, SGA parliamentarian, argued that a meeting notice was posted on a bulletin board inside the SGA office, which is open to all students. He also said the emergency meeting was called because many predicted Glenn's impeachment trial would take place at the next Senate meeting on Dec. 6, when the amendments would normally have been discussed.

The amendments in question limit presidential terms to two years and require for all presidential candidates to have at least a year of experience in SGA.

"For Jimmy, the term limits mean he couldn't run for a third term," Robinson said.

Glenn said running again for the presidency wasn't of his concern.

Only Tim Robinson, college of law senator, has announced his intention to run for SGA president. Under the new Constitution, Robinson's competition is limited to past or present SGA members.

The biggest issue in question last night was whether Orange gave sufficient public notice. Orange said he followed normal procedures for notification.

In addition to posting a sign on the bulletin board and sending an e-mail to the SGA listserv, he also called the Kernel to notify them of the meeting. A story announcing the meeting did not run in the Kernel.

Looking to stretch your workout a little farther? Try yoga.

Yoga is energizing, calms, helps with focus and keeps your mind alert while getting your body into shape," said Instructor and Manager Karen Thompson of the Yoga Health and Therapy Center.

Yoga has many benefits, including stretching and strengthening the muscular system. Thompson said yoga increases blood flow and flexibility, improves posture, relieves stress and is a fun way to work out.

Sharon faces immediate challenges

JERUSALEM — Veteran hawk Ariel Sharon will have precious little time to savor his lopsided Tuesday election victory as Israel's prime minister: He must quickly forge a government from the unruly factions in parliament, and he faces hostile Palestinians deeply suspicious of his intentions. Sharon routed incumbent Ehud Barak in one of the most one-sided elections in Israel's history, winning 62.6 percent to 37.2 percent as the final few votes were tabulated Wednesday morning. But the day after the balloting, attention was already focused on whether Sharon would be able to stitch together a stable coalition government, and how Palestinians would respond to a man they regard as an arch-villain. Sharon's first act Wednesday was to travel to his large ranch in Israel's southern Negev Desert to visit the grave of his late wife Lily, who died last March of cancer.

Bush summons 'families' for his plan

WASHINGTON — Hunting for middle-class support, President Bush is hosting a reunion of the "tax families" who helped him put a human face on his tax-cut proposals during the campaign last year. Bush has spent much of this week surrounding himself with regular folks, seeking to counter Democratic portrayals of his proposal as a windfall for the rich. On Wednesday, he was bringing together 21 "typical" families who were carefully screened on the presidential campaign trail to serve as Middle American emblems of those who would benefit. Several of his guests Wednesday were blue-collar workers, single mothers or single-earner families with children. They were meant to emphasize Bush's contention that his proposal would accelerate lower-income Americans' climb into the middle class.

Schools offer too much junk food

WASHINGTON — Schools that raise money by selling sodas and snacks on campus are sending mixed messages and discouraging kids from eating healthy meals, the Agriculture Department says. In a report prepared at the request of Congress, the department says it should have the legal authority to set nutrition standards for all foods and beverages sold in schools. USDA already requires school lunches and breakfasts to meet nutritional standards, but it would take an act of Congress for the department to begin regulating what is served outside cafeterias.

Study reassures cell phone safety

WASHINGTON — A study of 420,000 cell phone users in Denmark concluded callers are no more likely than anyone else to suffer cancer — but even this huge study, the latest to provide reassurance about the phones' safety, won't end the debate. The study, published in Wednesday's Journal of the National Cancer Institute, found no increased risk for brain or nervous system cancers, leukemia or salivary gland tumors among cell phone users, the types of malignancies that worry critics. But the study didn't last long enough to completely settle the issue. Several thousand Danes had used their phones for more than 10 years, the time it can take a slow-growing brain tumor to appear, but the majority had used them for only about three years.

Arrests drop at U.S.-Mexico border

LAREDO, Texas — Arrests of illegal immigrants have dropped all along the Mexico-U.S. border in what experts say could be a sign that Mexicans are staying home to enjoy a growing economy and rising hopes under the first opposition president in seven decades. From October through January, detentions were down 22 percent over the same period a year ago. The decrease marked the largest percentage drop since the U.S. Border Patrol started beefing up its presence in 1993 to stop a growing tide of illegal immigration across the 2,100-mile border.

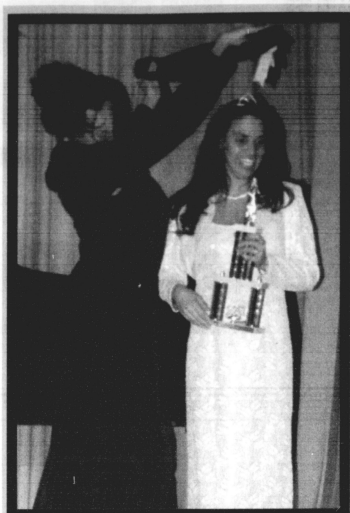

Aristide's return feted by masses

VILLAGE OF PEACE, Haiti — If he could afford a lottery ticket in this sewage-soaked shantytown, Jean-Jaques Nardy says he would choose lucky seven — the date Jean-Bertrand Aristide is inaugurated to a second term as president. Stringing plastic Haitian flags above the shacks for the inauguration on Wednesday, Feb. 7, Nardy says he believes Aristide will fulfill the promise to better people's lives in this impoverished country he made when he was a charismatic priest in the slums. But while Aristide's return is celebrated by much of Haiti's poor, it is being shunned by the international community, which was angered by the handling of May legislative and local elections. Thompson said yoga complements all other exercise routines. She said yoga exercises help stretch your muscles before and after a workout.

"There is no injury in practicing yoga every day. You receive the most benefits by practicing yoga every day," Thompson said.

An effective yoga session lasts 20-45 minutes and can be done every day or every other day.

A typical yoga class includes hatha yoga, stretching exercises, deep breathing and relaxation training. The class ends with a meditation session.

The Yoga Health and Therapy Center specializes in the yoga school and offers a variety of classes to fit everyone's needs, Thompson said. Athlete and meditation classes are available and offer some different techniques to yoga practitioners.

DATELESS

Draw back your bow, find a date

The clock is ticking: It is never too late to find a Valentine, here's where to look

By Scott Sloan
STAFF WRITER

You wake up on Valentine's morning and realize you don't have a date for the evening.

Classes can wait because you have a real emergency. You have to find a date. Here's what you do.

10 a.m. — Wake up and begin to panic.

10:30 a.m. — Continue to panic and begin to scream.

10:45 a.m. — After your neighbors have called the police or your roommate has knocked you unconscious with a baseball bat scream again.

11 a.m. — Shower and drown yourself in cologne because no one can resist anyone that smells like the entrance at Lazarus.

11:15 a.m. — Head over to the Student Center and begin to shameless hit on every person that walks near you. See your favorite line: "If I could rewrite the alphabet, I would put U and I together." Believe it or not, you still don't find anyone.

1 p.m. — You still have seven hours. No sweat. Head over to the Classroom Building and start hanging out by the restrooms. Since your first line bombed, start using another: "You must be from Hiroshima, 'cause baby you're the bomb." Despite your great history reference, you still can't find anyone.

3 p.m. — You've set a world record for striking out, so you decide to take a quick nap.

7 p.m. — Turns out you slept longer than you thought.

You start visiting every restaurant in town, seducing people on their Valentine's Day date. You get punched in the face after you tell the person to "Lose the zero and get with the hero." You end up on the floor completely out of it.

7:08 p.m. — As you're being rushed to the hospital with a broken nose and jaw, you try to get a date with the EMT. The conquest flashes the ring and ruins your chances.

Too bad! You spend the rest of the night in the hospital screaming at the heart-shaped green Jell-O.

Great gifts

Gifts that make a statement

- The drinks
A bottle of wine or champagne, not beer this time.
- The music
A tape of your Valentine's favorite songs. Just make sure they are songs that your Valentine likes.
- Write it out
A handwritten letter — that's handwritten. The pen is mighty and nothing speaks louder than words.
- Booty time
Good sex but safe sex. Above everything else, be safe!
- Beauty time
A pedicure, manicure or a back massage. Either do it yourself, or pay someone else to do it. Hint: This is better left up to the professionals.
- Cat's meow
A puppy or kitty. They are so cute anyone would love them.
- Food
Godiva chocolates.
- Feeling hot
Get the red, hot lovers basket. They are rated G, PG, R and X. Call 269-4438 for more information.

Only the lonely

Feeling sorry

- Sabotage
Grab a friend and work on destroying your ex's fun-loving day. Why should they be happy?
- Ha-ha
Go to a restaurant where you know there will be lots of couples and laugh at them. Ponder questions like, "How did she end up with him?"
- Fat money
Take pride in the fact that you are not wasting money on gifts for someone that probably would have ended up not working out anyway.
- Lie
Walk up to random people and tell them you are sleeping with their dates.
- Spy
Spy on your ex. This could go one or two ways. You will either see them being alone or you will see them with their new conquest. If you choose to do this, be careful. Nothing would be more embarrassing than getting caught.
- Eat
Eat, eat and then eat some more. Eat a whole bag of candy and then some chips. Not the Olestra kind. Go for the real fattening stuff.

Not so great gifts

Gifts that are classless

- Help
No matter how desperately they may need it. A self-help book is not the perfect gift. Save it for another holiday.
- The music
A tape of your Valentine's favorite songs. By all means, do not try to pass off a tape you made for someone else as an original. That's classless.
- Stuffed animals
Furby's (even though there are more than 350 of them now) do not make good gifts. They may seem cute at first but get old real fast. This includes stuffed bears and hearts.
- Booty time
Bad sex, but no matter how bad it is make sure it is safe sex. Above everything else, be safe!
- Cards
If you are going to take the time to buy a card then write something nice.
- Enhancements
Bree or penile enhancements are not a good idea. They will only lower your Valentine's self esteem.
- STDs
No one wants or needs an STD. If you have one then you need to get help.

RED OR YELLOW?

More to sending flowers than just roses

By Ashley York
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR

Disregard the joker that told you flowers were yesterday's news. Since they probably don't have a valentine this year and you do, it wouldn't be in your best interest to take their advice, for two reasons.

One, they probably don't know what the colors of flowers stand for, and two they don't know the distinction between a carnation and a rose. For all they know, a thornless rose means get lost, when it actually means love.

Instead of taking this person's advice and buying something you're unsure of, that could perhaps be inappropriate, stick to the simple stuff — flowers.

"Flowers are fresh, bright and they make people feel better," said Louann Samuels, the owner of Nature's Splendor, a floral shop.

Samuels said no one could go wrong with buying flowers for their sweetheart, friend or parent for Valentine's Day.

Even though some may argue flowers are overdone at times, Samuels said they generally result in positive reactions.

If you do decide to buy flowers, make sure you pick the appropriate color and flower. It does matter. Which is why the Kernel will make it terribly easy to say it with flowers.

Red rose — respect, courage, beauty, prosperity

White rose — humility, innocence, purity

Pink rose — grace, gratitude, admiration

Yellow rose — joy, freedom, slighted love

Red and white roses together — unity.

Madison: 'We might not be hitting a lot of home runs': UK will rely on talented young pitchers and fundamentals this season

By Ron Cox
STAFF WRITER

The UK Wildcat baseball team opens up the 2001 season tomorrow when they travel to Greenville, S.C., to take on the Furman Paladins.

The Cats play a three-game set this weekend, sandwiching two games at Furman (3-0) around a Saturday game at Wofford College (0-2) in nearby Spartanburg, S.C.

"We're excited about getting started with another season," said head coach Keith Madison, who is beginning his 23rd season at UK.

Due to the weather in Kentucky in February the Cats won't play a home game this month.

Madison hopes the early road games will help the Cats when they enter SEC play.

"We will be on the road a lot earlier in order to catch up with our southern opponents," Madison said, "and hopefully by mid-season we will be able to hit those guys pretty well."

This year's team can only be described as a young one. UK will have 19 players putting on their first Kentucky uniform — 14 freshmen and 5 junior college transfers.

To match last year's 15-0 start, Madison will have to count on four young starting pitchers to lead the way.

Sophomores Rob Corrado, Joseph Blanton, Mark Michael and Scott Wade are young, but battle tested, accounting for 22 of the Cats' 38 wins last season.

Corrado, Blanton and Michael were named to Baseball America's top-50 college prospects of 2002.

"I have seen a large improvement in those guys," Madison said. "They are talented, young pitchers and I think you are going to see a very deep and talented pitching staff."

Seniors Austin Madison and Jon Hooker will anchor this youthful staff.

Hooker, who led last year's team with 28 appearances while saving four games and striking out 41, was drafted by the Cleveland Indians last summer, but decided to come back for his senior season.

"One of my goals when I came here was to try to win an SEC championship," Hooker said. "I wasn't really pleased with the outcome of the season...I wanted to come back this year to lead the pitching staff."

The inexperience of the pitching staff pales to that of the offense. Gone are UK's top three run producers and home run hitters from last year.

"I don't think you can replace a Jon Wilson, Aaron McGlone or Andy Green with freshmen and sophomores," Madison said. "We have to hope guys like Vince Harrison, Beau Moore and people that are returning to our line-up continue to improve and help carry the offensive load."

So this year's team will have to rely on pitching and playing "small ball."

"We might not be hitting a lot of home runs," said Vince Harrison, UK's top returning hitter, "but we will be putting pressure on the defense by using the hit-and-run and executing the small things to make up for the home run power."

Redcoats vs. Big Blue: Wolverhampton University brings "football" squads to Lexington for cultural exchange with UK soccer teams

By David McIntosh
STAFF WRITER

The British are coming, Kentucky. They come armed with cleats and soccer balls as a sign of good will between UK and Wolverhampton University.

"We've been sending and receiving students to Wolverhampton, England, for many years now," said David Betze, a study abroad adviser.

Now to fortified relations, two soccer games have been arranged, both with greater meaning than merely a game of soccer.

"It's a great chance for my players to interact with people from another culture," UK men's soccer coach Ian Collins said.

Friday night, the UK men's and women's soccer teams square off against their Wolverhampton peers in Nutter Fieldhouse.

The Fieldhouse was chosen to ensure the game couldn't be cancelled by adverse weather. The women teams from their respective institutions play at 6:00 p.m., the men at 8 p.m. "I'm sure it will be a pair of really competitive games," Collins said. "I had the privilege to watch the men and women teams train, and they look good."

It will be all the more special for the British-native Collins who was born only 10 miles from Wolverhampton.

It could be tough for UK's team as it is mid-season in England leagues. UK's season finished months ago.

After the formalities of the game, a dinner between the two teams will allow the players to get to know one another.

College of Allied Health Professions Dean Thomas Robinson was involved in the organizing of this event and said that far more had gone on this week than a game of soccer.

Throughout the week students from Wolverhampton have had the opportunity to discuss studying at UK and also participating in some American culture, which included tickets to the basketball game Tuesday night.

"John Brookes, vice chancellor in Wolverhampton, asked me about the possibility of a game when I was visiting Wolverhampton one time," Robinson said. "I came back and spoke to (UK Athletics Director) Larry Ivy, who was enthusiastic about it."

UK's College of Allied Health Professions has always had links with Wolverhampton, and their initial exchange, which was established in 1991, has been extended University wide. Students have been involved in the Allied Health Exchange.

Robinson said the program provides an opportunity for the students to see if they would like to study at UK and allows American students a chance to mix with someone from another culture. The men's team is currently being housed in Holmes Hall, with the women's team living in Jewell Hall.

Wolverhampton students will also be visiting Dunbar High School to talk about life in England.

Robinson said he felt good seeing how the exchange had developed.

"It started off from a small experiment and resulted in postgraduate students coming to UK from England, games of soccer and friendship between students and faculty."

Wolverhampton vs. UK
Men's and women's doubleheader begins Friday at 6:00 p.m. at the Nutter Fieldhouse.

of the New York Yankees and Manchester United announced a strategic alliance Wednesday.

The arrangement unites the world's top baseball and soccer teams. The teams will share market information, develop sponsorship and joint promotional programs and sell each other's licensed goods.

"I believe we have a lot to offer each other in terms of synergy and cross-promotion," YankeeNets chairman Harvey Schiller said at a news conference. "This is a unique alliance in sports and shows that YankeeNets and Manchester United are real pioneers."

YankeeNets will help develop Manchester United's North American preseason tour in 2003, which could coincide with the FIFA Club World Championship, which the U.S. Soccer Federation is trying to bring to the United States that summer.

"It's yet another example of Manchester United, whether it be on the field or off the field, breaking ground," Manchester United Chief Executive Peter Kenyon said.

Romance in the air waves

I'll have to say I love you in a song

Music to fit every mood for Valentine's Day.

You have the flowers, you have the romantic dinner and you have the perfect gift, but something is still missing — the music. Nothing gets the message across like that special song. Somehow the right song seems to say how we feel much better than we could ever say ourselves. So depending on what you are trying to say, here are some songs that should do the trick.

Love songs

The top 10 songs to make someone either fall in love or stay in love with you.

10. "To Make You Feel My Love," Bob Dylan or Garth Brooks
9. "At My Most Beautiful," REM
8. "Let's Stay Together," Al Green
7. "Lover Lay Down," Dave Matthews Band
6. "Angel Eyes," John Hiatt
5. "Never My Love," The Association
4. "Wild Horses," Rolling Stones
3. "God Only Knows," The Beach Boys
2. "Crazy Love," Van Morrison
1. "When A Man Loves A Woman," Percy Sledge

Gettin' it on songs

If the first set of songs work, then you might need this set to let someone know that you would like to do the hilly-dilly with him or her. Put into the stereo while you are getting it on.

10. "Turn Your Lights Down Low," Bob Marley
9. "Debra," Beck
8. "I'll Make Love to You," Boy II Men
7. "Tired of Being Alone," Al Green
6. "Never, Never Gonna Give Ya Up," Barry White
5. "How Does It Feel," D'Angelo
4. "I'll Be the Cops Come Knockin'," Maxwell
3. "Any Time, Any Place," Janet Jackson
2. "Sexual Healing," Marvin Gaye
1. "Let's Get It On," Marvin Gaye

Songs for the dumped

Finally, if the previous two categories do not apply to you this Valentine's Day, then here are the top 10 songs to remind yourself how depressed you are because you are so, so alone.

10. "Ashes," Ben Harper
9. "1,000 Miles From Nowhere," Dwight Yoakam
8. "Song for the Dumped," Ben Folds Five
7. "The Thrill is Gone," B.B. King
6. "You're Still On My Mind," The Birds
5. "If It Ain't One Thing It's You," Alan Jackson
4. "I Wish It Would Rain," Temptations
3. "Raining in Baltimore," Counting Crows
2. "Beloved Wife," Natalie Merchant
1. "End of Everything," Chris Isaak

DOWN ON ONE KNEE

Popping the question

Arent' they a cute couple? In Venice, Italy, UK students Lance Rollins and Kellie Frazier share a moment after becoming engaged.

By Stacie Meihaus

STAFF WRITER

With a ring bought in Vienna and a romantic atmosphere created by the city of Venice, Lance Rollins popped the question to girlfriend Kellie Frazier.

Rollins, a finance senior, was studying abroad when Frazier, a music education senior, came to visit. He initially planned to propose when he returned home, but changed his mind.

"Why not? Venice seems to be the place to propose," Rollins said.

Not only did Rollins propose in one of the most romantic cities on Earth, he did so with flair. Rollins, Frazier and the group of friends that accompanied Frazier to Venice decided one day to go on a gondola ride. The friends, knowing Rollins' plan to propose, decided that they "didn't have enough money to go along." This left Frazier and Rollins to ride the gondola alone.

"Venice has a great atmosphere," Rollins said. "Most gondoliers are singing or playing accordions."

In this fairytale setting, Rollins proposed. Frazier said yes. Now, how would the rest of us, without the nearness of Venice or even a gondola, make the marriage question the most ideal situation in our life?

Brandi Baker, an undeclared freshman, said, "Oh gosh, there are so many ways."

Basically, Baker said she would like her fiancé to propose in a nice restaurant with something creative like the waiter bringing the ring out in a wine glass. She would want her fiancé to tell her parents before he asked her, but she decided it wasn't necessary for him to actually ask permission. She definitely would like him to get down on one knee for her.

When Nathan Speck, an architecture sophomore and Baker's unsuspecting boyfriend, was questioned as to how he would propose, he was surprised.

"I'd never even thought of it," he said.

Speck decided that he wouldn't ask the parents' permission unless he knew that they were big on tradition, but would rather have both he and his fiancée announce it to their families afterward. His tactics for proposing are not extreme.

"I wouldn't do anything stupid like skydiving," he said. He would like to take her to a nice dinner and say something general after doing something romantic. He would also get down on one knee.

Holly Points, a biology freshman, decided she would like her boyfriend to surprise her in some way. She said, however, that anything he chose to do would be special because it came from him. She also said she would like a non-traditional proposal.

"I would want him to ask me, but if it came down to it, I would ask him. It would take a lot of courage, but if I wanted it bad enough I would," she said.

As with Speck, Points' boyfriend, political science and education freshman Chris Cross, really had no idea of how he would propose. He, like Speck, would also rather ask her first and then announce the engagement to the families later. Cross was open to a non-traditional proposal.

"It wouldn't matter to me if she asked me." Whether in a gondola in Venice, the castle at Walt Disney World or simply a nice restaurant, an engagement proposal is a life-changing event. Make it an event to remember.

MORE THAN JUST FLOWERS

Rich or poor, it's the thought that counts

Will you take a check? Creativity and sincerity, not pockets full of cash, are all you need to win your Valentine's heart

By Sarah Zofpi

STAFF WRITER

If I had a million dollars

So let's say this month you got all those bills paid, budgeted wisely and saved a little under the table. That extra cash can be used to give your significant other a night they will never forget.

Without too many restrictions on the wallet, the perfect fantasy date is in store. Now is the time to take that special someone out for a real night on the town. Pick her up with a bouquet of 24 roses laced in baby's breath. Be the knight in shining armor. Open all the doors, pull out chairs and shake and hold her, really listen.

Check into a high-class restaurant like The Morrick Inn. A La Lucy's or, if you both like it, Tachibana for sushi. After a lovely dinner, if the weather suits, you could take her dancing in the park. If dancing doesn't work out then there are other options. You could go to a movie at the Kentucky Theatre instead of Movies 10.

Try ending the night with another surprise. Buy a bunch of candles and a bottle of wine, tell them to wait in the other room and close the door. Light the candles all around the room you both like the most. Pour two glasses of the Love Potion #9 and lead them out blindfolded, slowly revealing your most creative idea yet.

Shake your moneymaker

So you're not a millionaire. This doesn't mean you can't sweep your significant other off their feet. It simply means you may have to put that brain to work.

Although you can't give them a night of chariots and glass slippers before midnight, you can come up with enough to make them smile, and that's probably all they want anyway.

The plan is to ask that special someone a set of questions a few days or even the day before Valentine's Day (this could be a little obvious, hint, hint). Ask about their favorites. What are their favorite colors, movies, songs, foods, etc.?

Do what you can with what you have and the answers you got. For example, if they tell you their favorite color is blue, song "Always On My Mind," food anything chocolate, and movie The Way We Were, then get a box and fill it with these items. Wrap all the items in blue tissue paper and decorate the box in a way fitting to them.

This is a sure-fire way to see them light up. Your special someone will know you care and you'll know they are smiling.

Can't buy me love

Sadly but surely, you're broke as a joke. Before you panic, there is hope.

OK, here's the layout. Since you don't have much cash on hand, "less is more" will be key. Begin by brainstorming. Think of all the memorable moments you have shared, both good and bad. Consider what it is about them that still makes you catch your breath. If you just started dating, keep in mind what you have already shared. Maybe you already have inside jokes or something of the sort that has special meaning. After gathering all this

RANDOM THOUGHTS

Vaentine's Day roses with thorns

By Matt Mulcahey

SCENE EDITOR

I've been asked many times if I've ever been in love. I've thought about it, I honestly have, and the best answer I can come up with is, "I don't know." "They" inevitably respond with, "Well, if you don't know, then you haven't."

I'm beginning to think "They" might be right. There were times when I thought I was. When I was 18, I was sure of it. But if there's one thing I've learned since, it's this: When you're 18 you don't know anything.

Time distorts the truth, twisting memories, masking feelings. Sometimes you remember the good, sometimes you remember the bad. If I've ever been in love, not infatuation or contentment, surely I would've known beyond a shadow of a doubt.

If I had, then nothing, not even time, would be able to erase, fade or distort those feelings. So I've come to this conclusion: I have never been in love. Kind of sad, isn't it. It sometimes think I'm not capable of the emotion, like a robot that hasn't been equipped with that chip or a test-tube experiment in which the scientist forgot to add the gene.

My perceptions of Valentine's Day were formed a long, long time ago. They were filled with the thinly veiled contempt my parents held for each other. No, not my mother and father. They had long since given up on living together, before my fuzziest memories start to come into focus. I witnessed the Valentine's Day fiascos that accompanied my mother and stepfather's dismal, over-extended, contemptuous marriage.

And it's not so much these cold, chilly ghosts of Valentine's Days past that have forever shaded and jaded my views on love, but it is how they affected my stepfather, Mike. Of all the people I've run across in my 23 years (Am I really THAT old?), he's the only truly selfless person I have ever met. But he will probably never fall in love again. He'll spend the rest of his Valentine's Days alone, forever scarred and humbled by the dark, hurtful underbelly of love that Valentine's Day so blindly ignores.

This Valentine's Day I will once again battle fate, history and inner demons by spending Valentine's Day in a new relationship.

I think she's wonderful. Pretty, smart, plays guitar, loves Al Pacino movies. It's not easy to find this assortment of characteristics.

But I nonetheless expect it to fail, going down in flames underneath a venomous cloud of angry words and spiteful actions. And it probably will. And it will probably be my fault. Although I'll never admit it outside this column, most of my shattered romantic interludes have been my fault. Not all, mind you, but usually there was something I could've done or said to salvage what was left. I've even known what those things were most of the time. I just didn't do anything about it.

And, as usual, I make an array of promises to myself that I probably won't keep.

I won't say the wrong things. I won't do the wrong things. I won't be selfish, self-centered and self-involved. I won't end up like Mike, giving up, throwing in the towel, one too many bad trips.

And, most of all, I charge ahead hoping that the next time "They" ask me, I'll have an answer.

data, it is time to get to work!

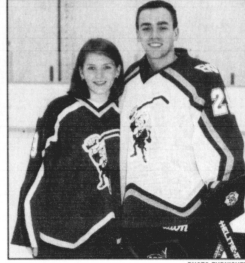

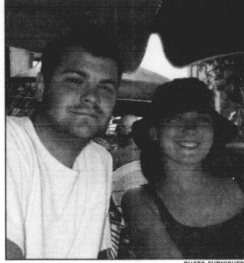

This is where your romantic side can shine crystal clear. With your notes, begin to create some of the most heartfelt gifts they will ever receive. For instance, a couple of ideas include cooking your Valentine a simple yet carefully thought-out dinner. Pick out foods you both enjoy and cook it in your own apartment. Set the table nicely with real silverware and dishes. After dinner, have your Valentine leave for a short time—a half-hour will do the trick. (Note: You must have this ready to go, hence the work that must be involved earlier.)

While they are gone, get your supplies out. Instead of buying 24 long stem roses, you can use only six. Using the petals, create a path for their "Scavenger Hunt of Love!" Scatter them throughout the house or apartment. In every room or so, set out one of their presents. The best part? They are all homemade! You can burn their a CD of their favorite love songs, write a journal of memories in detail, make a picture collage of your times together or cook a special dessert.

So what if you have no money? You still have a heart and these ideas will melt your Valentines over and over again.

YOUNG LOVE

UK couples come from all different walks of life, love

Danica Kubly, a French junior, and her boyfriend, Eric Plautz have dated for almost two years.

Clare Park, a natural resource senior, and Ben Dempsey have been dating for a little over a year.

Brandon Davis, a finance sophomore, has been dating Angie Burkhardt for a little over a year.

STAFF WRITER

Anything less than eight hours of driving for a date would be out of the ordinary for Danica Kubly, a French junior.

Her boyfriend, Eric Plautz, lives in Middleton, Wis., where they both went to high school. Kubly tries to endure the eight-hour drive to Wisconsin once a month to see Plautz.

"We dated on and off on high school," she said. "But we didn't really start until after we graduated."

This Valentine's Day is the first time the couple can spend it together, even though they've been dating for about two years. In the past, they have just talked on the phone.

"I will go home, and we will probably go out to eat," she said.

As far as long-distance relationships go, Kubly said that it hasn't been easy.

"We have definitely had our hard times and doubts," she said. "We talk almost every day. I think the fact we went to high school together and were best friends there helps us stay together."

By Becky Heisel
STAFF WRITER

Clare Park and Ben Dempsey met first in class, then again at a bar.

"That's when we began dating," said Park, a natural resource conservation and management senior. Dempsey graduated last May with the same degree.

They have been a couple for a little over a year now, and this is their second Valentine's Day. Even though they spent last year together, they will not be able to spend it together this year.

"Ben will be in Ohio for work over Valentine's Day," Park said. "We will not go out until the weekend."

Not only does Park have to wait for the weekend to see Dempsey, she also has to wait to see what Dempsey got her this year.

"He said he got me something but won't tell me what," she said.

Last year, Park got a valentine from Dempsey, which she still keeps in her nightstand.

His mother gave her candy and a card, too. She remembers "last year I got him — probably nothing."

By Becky Heisel
STAFF WRITER

Brandon Davis has been with his girlfriend, Angie Burkhardt, for 16 months. They met in middle school, but didn't start dating until before their freshman year in college.

"I kind of had a crush on her senior year though," said Davis, a finance sophomore at UK.

Their relationship continued, despite the distance between Lexington and Richmond, where Angie is a sophomore at Eastern Kentucky University.

They say getting to see each other only on the weekends is difficult. Though difficult, Davis said with a little trust, patience and love, they manage to work it out.

"You must understand that you and her both have something to do," he said.

Although their Valentine's Day plans are not made yet, they hope the romantic day will turn out better than last year's.

"We were going to eat at Applebees, but it was too busy. Every place in Lexington was too busy, so we ended up at Kentucky Fried Chicken," Davis said.

SAGE WORDS

Valentine's a day to be thankful

By Sarah Zopfi
STAFF WRITER

Every year about this time, people of all walks of life unite in a tribute to love. It is, after all, Valentine's Day. The posed yearly question at hand should not be, "What do I get him or her?" but instead, "Why am I getting this for him or her?"

What is it about this celebration of love that makes one want to adorn their beloved with gifts and favors? I think the answer lies in the heart of each of us.

And if you're thinking these next few lines are going to be chalked full of sentimental ornaments and sweet nothings, you may very well be right on target. But remember, it isn't what, it's why.

I think we as human beings should count ourselves lucky. We are lucky for so many things that come in and out of our lives, both joyful and upsetting. We gain an experience from each.

Perhaps the thing we should count as the luckiest is this thing called love. The ability to know it, the emotion to feel it and the need to give it is all ours. We can share this luck with each other every day, as often as we like.

Because we can express it, we often take it for granted. We let days, weeks or months go by without showering someone with love. I find myself guilty of this, and it is time to make a change.

The desire to express devotion is inevitable. So this Valentine's Day, ask yourself why. Why are you giving flowers? Why are you making dinner? If your answer is because it's Valentine's Day, then reconsider.

Not only is it Valentine's Day, but it is a day to let the luck shine.

It is a day above all others to use that luck you have been given. Use it to show the people in your life how you feel.

Know that the reason why you are giving gifts on Valentine's Day is rooted deeper than the holiday itself. Don't waste a good thing. Happy Valentine's Day!

Anthony Hopkins reprises his role as Hannibal Lecter in Hannibal, the sequel to Silence of the Lambs. Jodie Foster took a pass on returning as Clarice Starling, leaving the role to Julianne Moore (right). At Lexington Green.

Framebyframe

Finding Forrester

Director Gus Van Sant has yet to realize that originality is free. In this veiled remake of Good Will Hunting, a basketball player who attends an elite Manhattan prep school is taken under the wing of reclusive writer William Forrester. Starring Sean Connery, Robert Brown, Anna Paquin and Busta Rhymes. At Lexington Green and Man o' War.

Cast Away

Even in a film about a man trapped on a "deserted" tropical island, somehow Helen Hunt still manages to snag a part, bringing her total roles this year to 750,000 — give or take a few. Hanks evokes tears at the end of the film not because of his struggle to survive on the island, but because audiences are overjoyed they can finally leave the theater after two and a half hours of the most boring moments of their lives. Directed by Robert Zemeckis. At Lexington Green and Woodhill.

Miss Congeniality

Sandra Bullock, perhaps the most unimaginative and untalented leading lady in Hollywood history, has somehow garnered herself another role, this time as an FBI agent who goes undercover to solve a case. Also starring Michael Caine, William Shatner and Benjamin Bratt. At Lexington Green.

What Women Want

Mel Gibson stars as a male chauvinist who acquires the ability to hear what women are really thinking. Also starring Helen Hunt in her 750,001 role this year — give or take a few, Marisa Tomei, Alan Alda and Lauren Holly. Directed by Nancy Meyers. At Lexington Green.

The Family Man

Nicolas Cage gets a chance to act wild and crazy as a fast-talking Wall Street investment broker who mysteriously wakes up one morning to find he has a wife and kids instead of a sports car, girlfriend and freedom. And the crazy part is he likes it. What an idiot. Also starring Tea Leoni, Don

The Emperor's New Groove

An all-star cast stars — sort of — in this animated feature about an Egyptian emperor who is turned into a llama by his ex-administrator. He must now regain his throne with the help of a gentle llama herder. Featured voices include David Spade, John Goodman and Ertha Kitt. Well, it does sound better than any current films starring Helen Hunt or Sandra Bullock. At Lexington Green.

Traffic

Start engraving the Oscars. Although a story about the unbeatable war against illegal drugs in the United States is obviously outdated, director Steven Soderbergh proves that successful films can co-exist with artistic integrity. He also proves you can cast a film without Helen Hunt in it. Starring Michael Douglas, Don Cheadle, Benicio Del Toro, Catherine Zeta-Jones and Dennis Quaid. At Man o' War.

102 Dalmatians

Remember when Glenn Close was thought to be the best actress of her generation, a step behind Meryl Streep? Remember when Gerard Depardieu was considered by many the best actor in the world? They're now maniacally chasing puppets. What happened? At Woodhill.

Thirteen Days

It seems like this movie was supposed to come out 13 years ago. The often postponed Cuban Missile Crisis drama finally opened with Kevin Costner playing JFK's chief of staff. The movie has a strong performance from Bruce Greenwood as Kennedy going for it. But then again, Costner is trying another accent and director Roger Donaldson was responsible for Cocktail and Dante's Peak. Tough call. At Woodhill.

Chocolat

Vianne and her daughter open a chocolaterie

filled with irresistible confections in the sleepy French village of Lansquenet. Some people, however, are frightened by the seemingly magical powers of the shop, and worry of the effects it will have on the town's strict code of morality. Vianne comes to have a profound effect on the townspeople and in the process sirs her own secret desires. Starring Juliette Binoche, Judi Dench and Johnny Depp. Directed by Lasse Hallstrom. At Lexington Green and Woodhill.

The Gift

Suspense thriller about a woman with special sensory perceptions who is asked to help find a young woman who has disappeared. The Good news: Starring Cate Blanchett and Katie Holmes and directed by Sam Raimi. The really bad news: Starring Keanu Reeves and Giovanni Ribisi. Man o' War.

O Brother, Where Art Thou?

George Clooney continues teaming with talented directors to amplify his mediocre talent. This time, it's the Coen brothers to the rescue. The film, based on Homer's The Odyssey, follows the journey of three in pursuit of a hidden fortune. Also starring Coen favorites John Goodman, John Turturro and Holly Hunter. At Man o' War.

The Wedding Planner

Jennifer Lopez's ass stars as the back side of a wedding planner who falls in love with one of her clients (Matthew McConaughey). Also starring Justin Chambers and Bridgette Wilson. At Woodhill.

Sugar and Spice

Mena Suvari trades in Kevin Spacey and pedophiles for this film about a group of cheerleaders who decide to rob a bank to help care for one of the girls who has become pregnant. At Woodhill.

Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon

Ang Lee's martial arts epic is being dubbed the best martial arts movie ever. High-flying special effects and dream-like scenery make this film the antithesis of today's reality-based television. Score one more for the good guys. At the Kentucky.

Thank God for McDonalds?

You want holy fries with that?

HOUSTON — You want prayers with that Big Mac? Parishioners at Brentwood Baptist Church won't have to venture far for a burger, once a McDonald's opens for business in the church's new community center. "A lot of us have children," said Derrick Cyprian, chairman of the deacon board at Brentwood Baptist, which averages 7,000 parishioners every Sunday. "When we have different meetings and functions at the church, a lot of times you don't get to stop and get something to eat. This will make it more convenient." McDonald's spokesman Rick Nance said the new franchise is the first he knows of to be attached to a church. The fast-food restaurant, complete with drive-through window, will be co-owned by the church and one of its members, Ernest Redmond. It is scheduled to open in July. The hours and menu haven't been set. Redmond, who owns six McDonald's franchises in Houston, acknowledges that the location is a bit unusual. "It is definitely a new territory," he said.

Army vehicle even has 007 impressed

DETROIT — If James Bond tires of his Aston Martin, he might consider taking the Army's new Smarttruck for a spin. The concept vehicle, expected to be the highlight of next month's Society of Automotive Engineers World Congress in Detroit, has enough gadgets to keep even 007 happy. As touted by the Army: "It can disorient the enemy with its headlights, fend off attackers with electrified door handles and emit smoke screens to obscure a pursuer's line of vision." The truck is a project of the National Automobile Center, a research program at the U.S. Army Tank Automotive & Armaments Command, based in Warren, Mich. The center's goal is to let the military and private companies share research and technology in a way that benefits both, spokesman Paul Skalny said Tuesday at a media luncheon. The van-like vehicle borrows extensively from commercially available civilian technologies while adding some features not normally standard on the street: gunfire-resistant glass and armored plates among them.

IN OUR OPINION

Death, donor and doctor indecency

Organ harvest faces ridicule rather than respect

Imagine being the parent of a child who has just died. You're in a daze, not sure really what to think or what to do. Then on top of it all you later discover that organs and other body parts were stripped from the body of your little boy or girl without your consent. For hundreds of British parents in Liverpool, this nightmarish scenario has become a reality.

Last month, a government report was released detailing how pathologists at the Alder Hey Hospital in Liverpool had committed the grievous crimes, which involved 2000 dead children.

We at the Kernel are appalled and sickened by the lack of professionalism displayed by these pathologists. While a lot of good surely came from the harvested organs and body parts, that doesn't erase the fact that what was done was wrong.

Typically, if someone dies, people do not just swoop in and take their personal effects without asking the permission of their survivors. In the case of something as intimate and personal as organs and body parts, this level of respect shown to both the living and the dead should especially not be compromised.

What is even worse about the situation is that since the release of the report, organ donations and organ transplant operations have dropped drastically in various parts of Britain.

Sir Magdi Yacoub, a heart surgeon at the Royal Brompton Hospital said in the London Times on Sunday, "There are a large number of patients who will almost certainly die if this trend continues."

There is a serious pressure on the medical professionals in Britain to restore the faith of the general public in their health system. British Health Secretary Alan Milburne has called an emergency summit to deal with the issue, which we feel is a step in the right direction.

Regardless of how the public feels toward the medical profession currently, however, they should not stop donating organs. People live and die based on whether or not they get a new heart, liver or other body part. No matter how disgusted they may be with the current situation, Britains should not let go of their basic responsibility to their fellow man: That of continuing life.

Off the wall: Trials and tribulations for all 10

Hey, remember the time that troubled, delinquent Kentucky kid with the negligent parents walked into the courthouse in his home county, saw the Ten Commandments shining down on him from the wall and suddenly turned his life around by discovering the importance of values? You know why you don't? Because it didn't happen. Know why it didn't happen? Because humans develop their sense of morality from people who care about them and teach them well, not from a document.

Kentuckians should remember that in the midst of this endless battle to force public institutions to post the Ten Commandments for all heathen eyes to see.

With Kentucky's legislative session approaching, members of the Christian community throughout the state are fanatically rallying to the cause of ignorance and insensitivity. Citizen groups relentlessly push their agenda and bully legislators into silence. In a recent interview a spokesperson from the American Civil Liberties Union reported that an anonymous state legislator informed him he could not oppose any bill seeking to post the Commandments because his constituents would be furious with him, and he was counting on the ACLU to sue. For months on end various Kentucky counties have been wasting tens of thousands of dollars fighting a legal war with the ACLU, and it's never been more evident how downright wrong the cause of the moral majority is in this state.

Instead of spending a ridiculous sum of money fighting to subvert the Constitution, religious leaders could have directed their funds toward mending some of the social difficulties which might cause someone to forget human values. They could improve education, fight poverty, help the homeless; anything makes more sense than interior decoration.

I guess it's not surprising that with role models such as child molester Beverly Russell, and famous womanizers Jimmy Swaggert and Jesse Jackson, religious leaders prefer an inanimate object to do their jobs, rather than themselves.

Many different arguments have been posed to justify the posting of the Commandments, but nothing can hide the fact that this is no more than an attempt to Christianize all non-believers. With straight faces, leaders have creatively lied that they seek to post the Ten Commandments as a mere display of history. I find it amusing and ironic that by attempting to post the Commandments people are breaking one.

The hypocrisy of those who support posting the document is as evident as their contempt for people who do not share their faith. Does the Torah not bear historical significance? What does the teacher of a non-Christian student say when that child asks "what's wrong with my family?"

Many supporters have taken a more honest approach and argue that the majority of citizens support posting the Commandments, therefore the rights of the majority are being violated by not doing so. Sorry to kick your soapbox out from under you, but the Constitution isn't needed to protect the rights of the majority.

Just because something is popular doesn't mean it's in the best interest of society. In the mid-20th century, there was an overwhelmingly popular idea known

California, environmentalism and myopic views make for America's "perfect logic"

To the Editor:

Carr's and Stoeppel's myopic views should be dismaying to anyone paying attention. Tony Stoeppel argues that, since the population of California has doubled, "perfect logic" tells us that the number of power plants should also have doubled. Instead, "environmental wackos" have kept them from being built and now the citizens there are living with "anguish and torture."

Tony's argument, however, is based on the mistaken assumptions that the natural resources necessary to run an ever increasing number of power plants are readily available and that the cost of "harvesting" these resources is negligible. If this were the case, would environmentalists even exist? That is, if an endless supply of energy could be harvested from the Earth without damaging the environment, would anyone mine?

Many, if not most, environmentalists are environmentalists because they realize that, in fact, (have a seat before you read this Tony and Joy) the Earth's resources are finite. Many of these "senseless California wackos" realize that petroleum stores will run out at some point and that doubling the number of power plants to solve our problems today only compounds the problem for future generations.

Carr's claim that environmentalists' positions are based on an elevation of the Earth to a "spiritualistic status" is both pompous and inaccurate. Most environmentalists are concerned about things like the global carbon budget or aquifer exhaustion or changes in nutrient cycles due to acid precipitation. Most environmentalists are concerned that the Earth not exceed its carrying capacity, and that their children and grandchildren get to enjoy the same high quality of life that they have been blessed with.

Sure, there are folks out there who base their environmentalism on spirituality, but there are at least as many who base their environmentalism on empirical data.

Wake up folks.

In the realm of genius we must lay down our pills and polish for the sake of fine art

To the Editor:

Mitchell Watters' column was correct in its cry to preserve the future artists of our world. People with mental illness should not seek treatment because it might preclude their genius. Instead, they should live in misery in the hope that they will produce some artistic work for the rest of us before they end their aesthetically rich lives.

Great suffering produces great works, like those by Virginia Woolf, Hemingway, Van Gogh, Tchaikovsky and Sylvia Plath. Our culture would be sadly lacking without the turmoil and anguish that mental illness caused them. If these artists had been liberated from psychotic delusions or debilitating depression, they might have spent their lives as happily as the rest of us do. Instead of committing suicide, they might have furthered their artistic styles in a way that their shortened life-spans did not allow. But, of course, art isn't art unless the creator lived himself.

Maybe we should try to create more mentally ill since they have no other purpose on this Earth except to produce works for the rest of us to enjoy. Some greater economic and societal strife, coupled with a breeding program to ensure that watters disorders are inheritable are passed on, would give Mr. Watters the future he looks forward to: A future where the sufferers of bipolar disorder, chronic depression, schizophrenia and drug abuse are given no way out of their circumstances, except through a few (possibly) great works and a lot of suicide.

SHELLEY HUGHES AND WILL MILLS

as segregation. If popular opinion were the deciding factor behind legislative action the Civil Rights Act would not be a part of our history. John F. Kennedy blew it with civil rights because of public opinion, but LBJ had the guts to ignore the opinion of the majority and got the CRA passed because he recognized an injustice. Had the majority's opinion won out, blacks would never have been allowed the right to vote, integration would never have occurred and we would have likely faced a national race war. Commandment fanatics should consider this when praising the importance of popular opinion.

Some haven't tried to speak for men two centuries dead, claiming the founding fathers never intended to keep religion out of government to this degree. It seems to be spelled out pretty well to me, but I'm sorry the framers of the Constitution couldn't expound on the separation of church and state to your liking.

I guess they were too busy to get in-depth, what with splitting their time between feeding their faith and forcing their slaves to have sex with them. After all, who in the world wouldn't want religion to play a role in government? God knows great things have resulted in the past when religion and public policy embrace. Who can forget highly successful Christian PR campaigns like the Crusades, the Spanish Inquisition or the Witch Trials?

Religion can benefit society invaluably. It can bring people together, give people hope and teach people to love one another, but there is a proper way to go about achieving these goals.

The proper way begins with extending common respect to all human beings regardless of religious affiliation — not posting a document.

Somewhere along the line, Kentucky's Christian community has forgotten how to respect their fellow citizens, and in their blind pursuit of a ridiculous, insensitive goal, the moral majority has only proven that their morals are the misplaced ones.

Hard time: Drug to blame for 59 deaths in eastern Kentucky

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PIKEVILLE, Ky. — The robber asked for only one thing when he walked into the Marrowbone Pharmacy with a mask over his head and an automatic rifle in his hands: OxyContin.

Authorities say such incidents show the extremes to which people will go to feed their addiction to the new drug of choice in eastern Kentucky.

State and federal authorities, who blame the drug for 59 deaths in the region in the past year, have launched what they're calling the biggest organized drug bust in Kentucky history.

About 200 people were arrested Tuesday and Wednesday on charges of trafficking in OxyContin or obtaining the drug through deception.

The prescription painkiller, known as Oxy or OC among users, is intended for cancer victims or others suffering from severe pain. It can sell illegally for up to $100 a pill.

That high black-market price may be a big part of the reason the drug is flourishing in an economically depressed region like eastern Kentucky. Law enforcement officials say those with legitimate prescriptions may decide they need the money more than the drug.

"What happens is they'll realize there is money making potential in their prescriptions," said Pikeville police Chief James Justice. "For some of those people, a little extra money makes a difference."

Justice also said prescription drug abuse isn't viewed as negatively in eastern Kentucky as illegal drugs. "It seems like it doesn't have the same social stigma as snorting cocaine or smoking marijuana," he said.

U.S. Attorney Joseph Famularo said drug users in eastern Kentucky have been crushing the pills into powder and snorting it, or diluting it for injection.

"It's like the purest form of heroin I've ever done," Rob Ramundo, formerly a photographer for a Chicago-based men's magazine, told The Cincinnati Enquirer in a story published this week. "Absolutely, it was just as addictive."

In altered forms, the drug provides euphoric highs to addicts.

Ramundo, 29, is serving a four-year term at the Chillicothe Correctional Institution near Columbus, Ohio, for robbing six pharmacies in suburban Cincinnati last spring.

In Kentucky, Hazard police Chief Rod Maggard said he believes 90 percent of the thefts in his town are committed by people addicted to the drug.

People arrested this week ranged in age from 20 to 65. At least one was pushed into jail in his wheelchair.

Justice said his department is also investigating burglaries at six pharmacies where OxyContin was stolen.

He said police in Pikeville have worked about 200 cases in the past year in which people have altered their prescriptions to get more of the pills.

Miami mayor charged with battery

Busted: Mayor arrested for throwing a teapot at his wife

MIAMI — Miami Mayor Joe Carollo was arrested Wednesday and charged with battery after he threw a terra-cotta teapot at his wife's head, police said.

Carollo was denied an emergency bond hearing Wednesday evening and was to spend the night in jail before attending the hearing Thursday afternoon.

"I see no reason to treat Mr. Carollo differently than anyone else," said Miami-Dade Circuit Judge Mark King Leban.

Lawyers for Carollo and his wife, Maria Ledon Carollo, argued that Mrs. Carollo didn't want to pursue charges against her husband.

"Mayor Carollo has been singled out for much more serious treatment because of who he is," said Ben Kuehne, Carollo's attorney.

He read a statement from Mrs. Carollo that said, "Under no circumstances did my husband intend to harm or injure me."

But according to the arrest report, Mrs. Carollo had a golf ball-sized lump on her left temple and she told police her husband struck her in the head with a "hard object."

Mrs. Carollo at first wanted to press charges against her husband but later changed her mind, said Miami police Lt. Bill Schwartz. Police decided to file charges anyway.

"The Miami Police Department has a very aggressive domestic violence policy,"

Schwartz said. Carollo, 45, was charged with simple battery, a misdemeanor, because police decided the teapot was not a deadly weapon, Schwartz said. He could face up to a year in the county jail if convicted.

But Carollo, who has no prior record, likely won't see jail time, said Ed Griffith, a state attorney's office spokesman.

"For most first-time domestic violence offenses ... if there is an agreement between the victim and the defendant, this could go into a diversion program, with counseling and anger control classes to avoid any escalation of violence," Griffith said.

Carollo had two scratches behind his left ear, but Mrs. Carollo, 42, was not charged because "Mayor Carollo was the aggressor," Schwartz said.

Mrs. Carollo told the first officer who arrived, "I know you are his friend but you have to act as a cop. Look what he did to me," according to the police report.

Carollo responded, "This is what you wanted (from the beginning)," the report said.

When police asked Mrs. Carollo if she wanted ice on her forehead, she said, "No. This is the way I want it for the picture."

Mayor's spokesman Jay Rhodes declined comment on the charges.

"It's strictly a personal matter and it's business as usual here," he said.

One of the couple's two daughters called 911 at 7:10 a.m. The dispute was over by the time officers arrived at the mayor's home in Coconut Grove, a trendy, lushly landscaped neighborhood by Biscayne Bay. Police later took the girls to school.
