College Editors Challenge Hearst On Armament Policy

It seems that William Randolph Hearst is the personification of a fundamental problem—arrogant nationalism—the nationalistic movement in the search for a way to preserve peace.

It is for this reason that the Association of College Editors has seen fit to submit Mr. Hearst to the most searching and thorough examination prepared to bring Lord Beaverbrook to trial before the bar of public opinion as England's Number 1.

Remembering that when and if there is another war, we as the youth of the country must bear the brunt, it is for us to decide whether or not "Preparedness" is in any way a better policy.

My dear Mr. Hearst: In a recent interview, you challenged the Americans, "If Americans have not lost their common sense and balance of judgment in these days of internationalism, Lord Beaverbrook, owner of the London Daily Express and associated papers was asked to state his case for nationalism."

Fans Give Big Blue Send-Off from Union Station Last Night

With a determination to carry on in the same great style that has characterized their playing in the last few games, the Kentucky Wildcats entrained last night for Memphis to meet the Cats' last chance at victory this season.

A crowd of several hundred fans and the University band was on hand at the Union station last night and gave the Wildcats a rousing send-off. The program, sponsored by Sukey, included several yells and school songs.

The team will arrive in Memphis in time to take a light workout on Ferguson field, home of the Lynx. They will return to Lexington Sunday at 11:30 a. m. at the Union Central station. All students are asked to be there.

The Big Blue continues to be hampered by injuries which may keep several regulars out of the lineup Saturday. The ends seem to be the most hurt, with a light workout on Ferguson field, home of the Lynx.

NO RUBBER TYPE

Occasions have arisen when articles submitted for publication in The Kernel by persons or organizations were held over until a later edition or were not used at all. For the benefit of those persons who feel that prejudice has determined whether their publication should be published, we hasten to assure them that such has not been true.

Perhaps you take considerable pains and some time to prepare, say, a report of a meeting of your checker club. You have related the matter in your customary elegant style, not failing to include an abundance of flowery phrases and pretty little editorial comments. Naturally, after you have so extended yourself, you expect to see your contribution in print; when The Kernel appears filled to overflowing with unimportant items, you become irked.

The Kentucky Kernel contains only seven columns and a certain number of pages each issue. Of course, since it is upon that source which the paper depends principally for sustenance, advertising is never deleted. At times it becomes necessary to omit feature articles, editorials and news stories. That this procedure must be resorted to is distressing but there is no other solution to the problem of trying to please everyone.

Some complaints have come to our attention concerning the use of INS stories in preference to those relevant to the University and campus life. This service was not added as an advantage to the editors but to our readers. It was believed that by this means students, who might otherwise have no opportunity of reading about national and international affairs, would be benefited.

It is our aim to present, in as interesting a manner as possible, news, features and other matter which will appeal to the most people. We appreciate your efforts and will do our best to satisfy. So, do not be too harsh with your criticism. Remember, there is no rubber type.

PAGING A UNIVERSITY CONTACT MAN

The recent regrets sent by President Roosevelt to his invitation from Dr. McVey to visit the university on his Harrodsburg expedition indicate most forcefully the dire need of proper contacts not only in administrative circles, but in similar groups where familiarity means so much to the well being of a state university. Is it any wonder that the President had to refuse the invitation finally offered by Doctor McVey? Has it come to pass that the president of the University of Kentucky has to handle two gigantic tasks instead of one—the only one for which he is paid, and paid sparingly?

Somewhere along the line, the proper contact man for such matters has been overlooked. This has to be done about it. This is the representative educational institution of the state of Kentucky, and though he be within 30 miles of the institution in question, he can not be engaged to honor us with his presence merely because of poorly laid plans on the part of those drafting the personnel of the university to employ the proper person to attend to such matters.

Doctor McVey is a busy man. He has countless contacts of other sources to maintain and a school of two thousand and some odd to keep in order. Is it fair to expect him to take on another tremendous task? He did the best he could in getting Mr. Roosevelt to speak here. But could the President of the United States be expected to have any open engagements on his tour through Kentucky after it had been known for sometime that the tour was to be made, at what time, and of so short a duration? After all, Kentucky is a large state, and there are many influential people in Washington working for various groups to get such an illustrious man to pay them a visit whenever possible. They know things in advance, and lay their plans accordingly. They are informed, whereas the University of Kentucky has only an extremely busy and loyal head who courageously attempt to keep up such contacts against tremendous odds.

Perhaps some of Kentucky's alumni failed to do their part by their Alma Mater in this matter. Whatever be the case, let us, as students, pledge ourselves to aid the university to the best of our ability in bringing about better contacts along such lines as well as all others. It is hoped that the proper authorities of the institution have seen this gap in the ranks of the legions fighting for the prominence of the state of Kentucky among the other states in the Union. May it be filled immediately so as to avoid future deplorable exhibitions of obscurity among Kentucky institutions of learning.

AN ALLY?

Germany, already powerful, is taking rapid steps toward building a military machine of immeasurable proportions. From a general military attitude which Nazi propagandists have built up in the minds of the great mass of Germans, Hitler is proceeding on a dangerous course—dangerous not any more for Germany than for European civilization.

Secret diplomacy of the old Kaiser school has passed apparently but in its wake has come the secret diplomacy of nationalism which Europe has a right to fear.

In the present diplomatic tie-up by trade agreements, financial agreements, ententes, pacts of non-aggression and outright military alliances, Germany is out in the cold. True, she is a party to several important pacts but she stands economically and militarily unaided. No great nation in the midst of building the machine that Hitler is building can afford to stand alone—and the jealous nations of Europe may be waiting for a chance to beat the other to a military agreement with Germany.

Who will it be? It cannot be France, as everyone knows. Italy is afraid of her northern frontier and is guaranteeing the territorial integrity of Austria against German invasion for her own safety. She is out of consideration. Then Russia, a party with Germany to the secret diplomacy of pre-World War days, will have nothing to do with the imperialistic Hitler regime. The family tie-up between the Tsar and Kaiser is missing and the countries are further apart because of it. Who is left? England.

While the British press is reflecting adequately apparently the opinion of the great empire in its caustic criticism of the Hitler regime, there is no doubt in the minds of many that England may be afraid of herself. She is afraid that an already secretly proposed alliance with Germany may seriously hurt her relations with other continental powers.

Some country is going to ally itself with a powerful Germany, getting more powerful every day. It may be England.

JEST AMONG US

Herr Hitler at last has learned that truly the Worm will turn.

Men of money claim that the more wealth a person has, the more it costs him to live; which leads us to believe that the living expenses of some college students is nil.

Pitiful, indeed, is the young man who is convinced that he can croon, and then goes ahead to prove it.

It is said that the delightful custom of dunking is a product of Germany; maybe that explains why only immigrants of the Vaterland dine in our American restaurants.

Not all of us are big enough or strong enough to earn football letters but at least we can display our other badges of distinction by way of the good old watch chain method.

After two years of earnest effort, Dr. E. B. Harper, professor of ology, has finally won recognition for his department of the college by the American Association of Social Workers.

exactly sure of them. They provide us with the most companionship you never heard anybody say they And we go right on liking them better every time we see them. Humanity is of a strange complexion.

Last year we had in our midst a fellow who had no enemies, still, you never heard anybody say they liked him for any of the several things you usually praise people for. He didn't make a good fraternity man because he couldn't be bothered. He couldn't go to class, so he couldn't be bothered being a good reporter. He didn't even make a good politician! This boy had no enemies—everybody liked him because his ways amused them; they shook their heads over his antics, still do, and end up by saying they wish he had come back. Humanity is often impartial.

My own idea has been that turning the other cheek was fine for the Biblical characters, but this is 1934. If I could live that adage and make it work for me, all would be fine, and I would probably find myself in no worse straits for it. But many of us are so drenched in this thing called sympathy that we forget what plans we have made for ourselves. Humanity is so inconsistent.

It is very interesting to turn around and face things from the offensive side. Heretofore I have spoken from the receiver's end. How true is it that those we love the best we treat the worst? How do you figure that out for yourself, and know that you are calculating fairly and unselfishly? Will common sense always be your guide, or will it fall you and give way for the squeaking wheel? Indeed, humanity is a striving thing.

When you think about such things, it is always well to remember that the unsatisfied ones are the ones who make things move. They're hard to live with and they cause an awful lot of commotion, but their very dissatisfaction makes others move, and brings about those changes we can always look forward to—those differences that make the world worth striving in. Humanity, I guess, is just a living, pulsing thing.

How many people do you like because they have faults? I'll grant you that everybody has them, but stop and think about the ones you like for the express reason that there's so darn much wrong with them. They're the bright moments in our lives, and they give us the most to worry about. They're our best friends, and we're never

1. Does William Randolph Hearst agree that if we pile on our already shaken and disordered economic system the further dislocations, unpayable debts, revolutions, which we now know are the necessary legacy of war and which so shook the relatively sound system of 1914, then it will probably finish off the present order in chaos?

2. Is it William Randolph Hearst's general view that the best way to prevent that recurrence is to continue the old armament competition and decline to discuss international agreement or organization? If so, on what grounds does he believe that the old method will not produce the old result?

3. For a nation to be secure under the competitive principle it must be stronger than any possible rival. What comes of the rival? Is he to go without defence? How have we regarded the victory of America in 1914 and men up to the last, William Randolph Hearst among them, proclaimed how free their hands were, America was drawn in. Does William Randolph Hearst think that America could have regarded the victory of America as a mistake?

4. If he thinks America's entrance was a mistake, would he have regarded the victory of the Germanic powers, the creation, that is, of an hegemony so predominant that America could not have resisted any demands that it cared to make upon Americans, as a matter of indifference? If so, why trouble about armaments at all—if it is a matter of indifference that combinations, much stronger than America, should arise?

5. On the eve of the War, Sir Edward Grey declared that the only possible alternative to the sea-war of the Balance of Power, by which the precarious defence of one was achieved by the depriving of the other of all defence, was for both to pool their power to secure the observance of a common rule of international life, like arbitration of disputes; to build up what Asquith called the community of Power behind the law. On what general principle should America be guided in her relations with the world?

6. When I said I would answer his questions, I had no idea that I would be confronted with such an immense catechism. "I would take me a great deal of labor and time to answer the questions as they should be answered. In the busy life I lead, I do not have the opportunity to do so. It is too big a proposition for me."

7. The significance, the importance of these questions is increased because there are two powerful men in two powerful countries to whom those questions may be put as to one man. Particularly for that reason, they must have an answer—not for the readers of the newspapers

8. If, on grounds of national security, America cannot accept the preponderance of a foreign combination, why should Americans, especially as their preponderance (the Allies) resulted in imposing upon their rivals a Treaty which Mr. Hearst himself refers to as the "Utter injustice of the Versailles Treaty?"

This whole letter of mine is being sent to the editors of 644 college newspapers in America, and to the editors of the college papers in Canada, for simultaneous publication as an open letter on or near as possible to the day of November 11, Armistice Day.

Yours is a tremendous influence in America. More than any other man you represent the "Power of the Press." What you believe, you have the power to lead millions of other Americans to believe. That is why it is so tremendously important that you explain and defend "nationalism" as opposed to the "internationalism" embodied in the spirit of the League of Nations, to those of my generation who are about to believe—one way or the other.

Yours very sincerely, FRANCIS G. SMITH, JR., President, the Association of College Editors
