Antenna arrival late next week will put RFL on the air soon

By JULIE ESSELMAN
Staff Writer

If everything runs on schedule in the next week, students can expect to hear UK's radio station, Radio Free Lexington, on the air on Feb. 22.

Most of the equipment has arrived and been set up in the studio, but station personnel are still awaiting the shipment of the antenna sometime this week.

"We don't foresee any additional delays, except possibly the antenna," said Program Director Mark Beatty.

WRFL had been expected to go on the air in January, but delays in the shipment of various equipment items forced the postponement.

Beatty said this could be attributed to a high number of orders received by the company supplying boards for the studio.

Following a phone survey last semester which showed overwhelming support for RFL among students, the UK Board of Trustees approved a $1 increase in activities to help the station.

Originally, RFL members had set a target date of Oct. 1 for being on the air but the UK Physical Plant Division estimated it would take almost $25,000 to renovate a storage area in the Student Center for broadcasting a recording needs.

The group had received $40,000 between the city of Lexington and the University for start-up costs. The city and University had also contributed $15,000 between them for yearly operating costs.

The increase in student activities fees, however, was needed to ensure the station's operating budget.

Now, one piece of equipment is all that is needed to put the station on the air.

While awaiting the antenna's arrival, workers plan to put finishing touches on what has already been set up.

"We're working on completing the studio with cabinets for the equipment to fit into," Beatty said.

The individual departments are working on their organizational staffs. Everyone has accomplished that reasonably well."

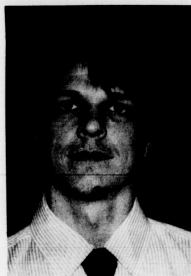

In addition, training sessions will be conducted this week for potential disc jockeys. Beatty said that 130 people are trying out for DJ spots.

"We're going to have everyone who was interested be trained and then submit a 30-minute tape," he said. He anticipates this taking from a week to 10 days to complete. Staff selection will be based on the tape, training and the amount of work individuals have put into the station, Beatty said.

Although Beatty said they have enough people trying out for positions right now, "we wouldn't turn anyone away" who still wants to try for a spot. However, they would most likely have to wait until after this semester to go on the air.

Beatty said he was pleased with the station's progress despite the equipment delays. "As soon as we got the equipment, everything has gone very smoothly," he said. "Everyone's ready to crank up."

WRFL's studio is set up on the bottom floor of the old Student Center, and Beatty said they already have a "significant library" of records and tapes.

Although the Feb. 22 date seems fairly definite for the station to make its first broadcast, Beatty said "once everything is set up and we finish the transmission, we'll make a definite announcement." The first song to be played on the air has not been decided yet, he said.

WRFL will broadcast from 88.1 FM on the radio and will reach listeners within a 10-mile radius of the campus.

Roselle against taxing tickets to help library

By HEIDI PROBST
Staff Writer

UK President David Roselle said last night that placing a 50-cent surcharge on athletic tickets to help the UK library's budget situation is not a good idea.

"It's a mistake to raise money by doing something with tickets and designating it for one area . . . so other than that I don't see anything wrong with raising additional revenue," Roselle said.

Members from the Arts & Sciences Library Advisory Committee sent a letter Friday to Roselle suggesting a 50-cent surcharge on UK football and basketball tickets to help the ailing library. Roselle said he hasn't yet received the letter.

Nancy Dye, chairwoman of the advisory committee, said the letter is a suggestion because the library needs support.

Paul Willis, director of libraries at UK, said the problem is that the book budget is the same this year as it was last year — $1.6 million, while the cost of periodicals rose 17 percent this year. With that increase and the current budget standing, the library is unable to buy the periodicals needed.

"This means taking 17 percent of $1.6 million which will make us have to reduce the number of periodicals we subscribe for in order to keep in line with this budget," Willis said.

He said if this were to happen the periodicals would be reduced by 34 percent, a $500,000 reduction.

The library is currently undergoing a journal review and has had to stop buying journals, which are too expensive for the library to afford.

Nearly one-third of the journals the library subscribes to are foreign, Willis told the Kernel two weeks ago, and the declining value of the American dollar makes many journals too expensive to purchase.

UK Board of Trustee Member Larry Forgy first presented the idea of taking money from athletic funds to help the needy areas of UK.

Two weeks ago, Forgy suggested dipping into money planned for an addition to Commonwealth Stadium to help raise faculty and staff salaries at UK.

Forgy said last night that he has not seen the letter concerning the library yet. He declined to make any further comment.

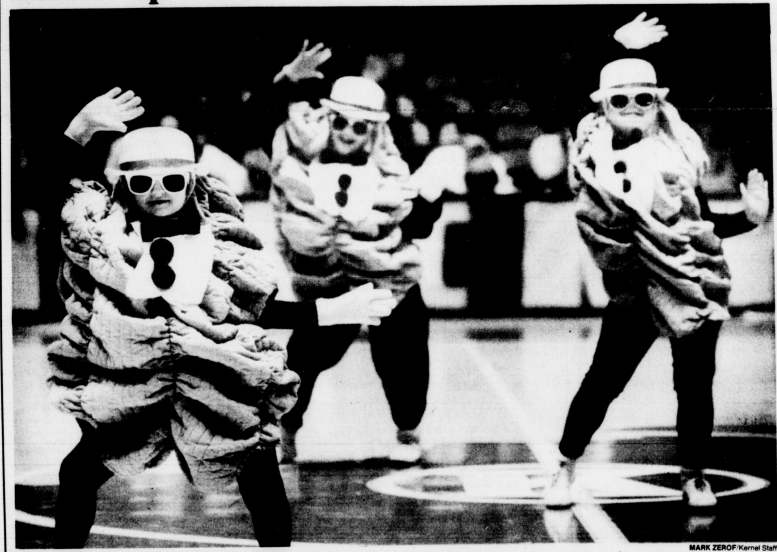

Willis and the library would not receive any help from Gov. Wallace Wilkinson's proposed budget.

The budget proposal recommends virtually no increase in funding for higher education in the 1988-89 fiscal year and only a 5-percent increase the following year.

Under the budget proposal, UK would receive only $900,000 in additional state revenues in the 1988-89 fiscal year.

The University, however, needs almost $19 million in the next fiscal year just to stay even.

Several young girls participated in the half-time program at the UK Lady Kats basketball game Friday night. They dressed up like raisins and did a dance in front of a large crowd of about 1,000 at Memorial Coliseum.

Bush offers apology as candidates cool rhetoric

By MIKE GLOVER
Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — Vice President George Bush distanced himself yesterday from charges his campaign has been leveling at chief GOP presidential rival Bob Dole as candidates of both parties began cooling their rhetoric on the eve of Iowa's crucial precinct caucuses.

The Democrats, with a tightly bunched group of front-runners, focused on attacking U.S. policy in Central America, with Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis suggesting he'd be willing to tolerate a Soviet client state in the region as long as it wasn't a platform for offensive military operations or the subversion of neighboring governments.

Bush, appearing on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley," offered to "totally apologize" to Dole's wife, Elizabeth, if a Bush campaign statement offended her, but declined to extend an apology to Dole.

"I don't think he's mean-spirited," Bush said. "But I don't think the charges that that campaign has leveled against me over and over are true at all."

Bush was questioned about a statement issued by Iowa campaign manager George Wittgraf which attacked Dole for "mean-spiritedness" and raised questions about management of his wife's finances.

"I looked at that and saw nothing that I felt was a criticism of Elizabeth, but if so, I would totally apologize to her," Bush said. "She's a friend."

Dole, interviewed on NBC's "Meet the Press," said of the feud with Bush "as far as I'm concerned it's over."

Dole couldn't resist, however, a shot at Bush on the Iran-contra arms deal.

"I do think there's a feeling out there that somehow, obviously, Bush is more closely tied to that than any of the rest of us," Dole said.

The campaign flurry came as 11 of the 13 Republican and Democratic presidential candidates stumped across Iowa with only Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. and former

GEORGE BUSH

Secretary of State Alexander Haig staying away.

It comes on the heels of a survey showing Dole with a double-digit lead over Bush in a poll published by the Des Moines Register, while indicating Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt led Illinois Sen. Paul Simon and Dukakis among Democrats.

The candidates planned an exhausting series of speeches as they tried to fire up backers to turn out in each of Iowa's 2,487 precincts today. It's the first test for Democrats, and an important early battle for the GOP.

Appearing at a Cedar Rapids breakfast, Gephardt bragged about Wednesday's House vote rejecting aid to the Nicaraguan contra rebels.

"For six long years, we've had this senseless policy of sending our tax dollars to soldiers in Nicaragua," he said.

Campus program teaches studying skills

By DAVID ROGERS
Contributing Writer

To Becky Castle, UK's campus can be a very big place.

Castle, like many other freshmen, has discovered that the change from high school to college can be just a little intimidating. Trying to deal with midterm exams, research papers and fast-paced classes where the outside readings are measured in reams instead of pages, can frighten even the best prepared entering students.

That is where the UK Learning Skills Program comes in.

"It wasn't the size of the campus that overwhelmed me," said Castle, an early graduate from Henry Clay High School. "It's just that there is a lot more time spent studying than in high school. The learning center has really helped me to get organized and be able to study better."

The Learning Skills Program offers classes designed to help students study smarter, not necessarily harder.

For $10 a semester, students can attend up to 20 workshops. Workshops dealing with motivation, reading techniques and note-taking can all give students the edge they need to do better in class.

And according to students, the workshops are beneficial. Castle said that although she had been taught study techniques in high school, she was still not comfortable with her study habits.

"Usually I could get what I needed out of the readings, but I would get more out of the lectures," she said. The study reading workshop "helped me learn what to study from the book."

Sharon Laumas, acting director of the Learning Skills Program, says that even graduate students can find the workshops helpful.

"Most people think that graduate students would know how to study," Laumas said, "but some very bright students can learn how to work the system or procrastinate and then cram for a test and still make good grades."

But in graduate school, where students are expected to be more independent and self-motivated, she said they often run into trouble.

Services offered by the Learning Skills Program are not just limited to workshops on study habits. The computer learning lab, located in Frasier Hall, has programs to help students with math, reading skills, English usage and vocabulary enrichment.

Programs are also available to students who may be thinking of graduate school, including pre-tests for the CTBS, the GRE and the GMAT.

Melanie Lybarger, a learning skills counselor who teaches some of the workshops, thinks that although students may not have enough time to use all of the techniques presented in the workshops, at least they can know which of their study techniques are the most effective, and which ones don't work.

Laumas agrees that it is not easy to form new study habits, but that at least the student can feel more prepared after attending the workshops.

"The whole idea behind all of these courses is to help the student feel more in control," Laumas said. "Many times, the student gets this feeling of being overwhelmed and becomes frustrated, and just begins a downward spiral. We hope to make students realize that there is something they can do if things are not going well."

Bruce Springsteen to perform at Rupp Arena in March

Staff reports

This is how rumors got started. The people from CBS Records have confirmed that Bruce Springsteen's "Tunnel of Love Express Tour" will roll into Lexington's Rupp Arena on March 31. John Cougar Mellencamp is said to be in Rupp on March 11.

Rupp Arena officials still say they know nothing about it.

However, negotiations appear to be under way. The tour will hardly compare in scale to the "Born in the U.S.A. Tour," which extended over a year. Springsteen plans to play only 10 dates beginning in Worcester, Mass., on Feb. 25.

Correction

Due to a reporter's error, a story about UK's new substance abuse advisers that appeared on Feb. 1 incorrectly stated that graduate program Lisa Stoffer is in. Stoffer is a graduate student in the College of Social Services.

Wheelchair players provide perspective

Steve Stobaugh was cruising along on his motorcycle when he decided to pass the pesky truck. The truck cut him off. Stobaugh and his bike crashed to the pavement. That was Labor Day, 1983.

Yesterday, Stobaugh played basketball for the University of Kentucky. And in some ways he played it better than Rex Chapman or Ed Davender could ever dream.

Stobaugh plays basketball without running. He plays it without jumping. He has to. The motorcycle accident claimed the lower third of his right leg. It took a limb. It didn't take him.

"I look life in the eye and spit," Stobaugh said. "Life's no bed of roses."

There were 175 other basketball players just like Steve Stobaugh at the UK Seaton Center this weekend. Sixteen teams from 12 states, Canada and Holland converged for the ninth annual Bluegrass Invitational Wheelchair Basketball Tournament. The only losers were on the scoreboard.

"Playing basketball gives us an opportunity to show people what our ability is instead of what our disability is," Wheel Kat captain Doug McLaughlin said.

"It's a shame more people can't see that. They should."

"The public is not aware of what we have to offer," Wheel Kat coach Mike Woodard said.

What these guys have to offer is the true essence of sport. It's not illegal recruiting. It's not Proposition 48. It's not drug testing. It's not gambling. It's none of the evils that sport is saturated with.

The zealots who worship the able basketball players at UK should see the Wheel Kats. A half-time exhibition at Rupp Arena would seem to be fitting. Perhaps it could scale down the ridiculous hoopla that surrounds the other Kentucky basketball players.

See Doug McLaughlin lead a fast break in a chair and suddenly what Ed Davender actually said to Eddie Sutton doesn't seem so damn important. The Wheel Kats can put collegiate athletics in perspective. They can put yourself in perspective.

Watch a wheelchair basketball game and you'll see all the fire of a Final Four. You see a good shot. A great pass. Soon, the chairs begin to fade into just an extension of the player. Until one tips and a guy spills the floor.

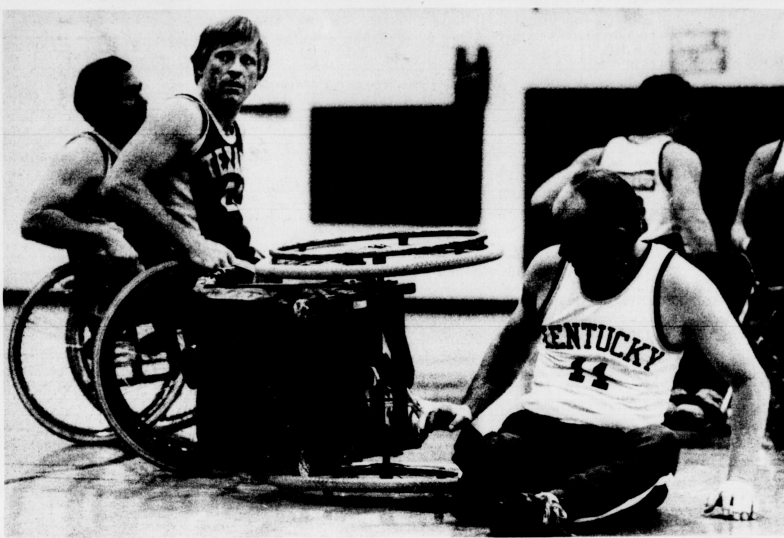

"The biggest beneficiary is these guys are able to be competitive," Woodard said. "That's a desire these guys still have."

The fierce competition stays between the lines on the court. The friendship doesn't.

"I'm glad I came out." Wheel Kat Rod Bobblitt said. "I like it a lot better than regular basketball."

"It's a lot of fun," McLaughlin said. "We work with each other and we learn from each other."

One lesson the players learn from each other is they need each other. The danger of a physical disability is the isolation it can cause. It shouldn't. A team assures that it doesn't.

UK Wheel Kat Steve Stobaugh struggles to get back in his chair during a game against Texas yesterday. Sixteen teams competed in the ninth annual Bluegrass Invitational Wheelchair Basketball tournament held at the Seaton Center.

"If you're just mainstreaming and not with people with disabilities, you miss a lot of having something in common," McLaughlin said. "So much of what we get from basketball helps in everyday life."

Perhaps the biggest help is physically. Basketball gives these guys an opportunity to be active. There isn't many chances to do so when everyday is spent in a chair.

"It's good to get out there and sweat and have some fun," Stobaugh said. "It's good to get that tired feeling. I think a person should stay in shape and not become an old fart. This just fits the bill."

Sutton said he was pleased his club kept the pressure on — even after taking a comfortable lead in the second half.

"We've had a tendency that when we get to the point where we can break a game open, you into double figures and really go past people, we relax," said Sutton. "That's what I told them. . . let's build on the lead and not lose our intensity level. And we did that."

Rex Chapman and Bennett added 15 each for Kentucky. Rob Lock, who helped the Wildcats control the boards, had 13 points and hit 6-of-6 from the field. Bennett had a game-high 11 rebounds.

Freshman Doug Hartsfield led Mississippi State with 16 and reserve Chris Hall added 10.

After building a 23-23 halftime lead, Kentucky saw Mississippi State close to 35-31 with 16:14 left on back-to-back baskets by Greg Carter.

State closed to 49-35 on another Carter basket but then hit only one field goal in the next 5½ minutes. Kentucky's 18-2 run never let the Wildcats fall below 17.

UK climbs back into first place with weekend win

AP and Staff reports

STARKVILLE, Miss. — With its 83-59 blowout of Mississippi State Saturday, the UK basketball team regained first place in the Southeastern Conference.

Florida, which held the No. 1 spot going into the weekend, lost to Auburn 58-57 at Gainesville and slipped into second place.

UK, ranked 10th nationally, improved to 18-3 overall, and pushed its SEC record to 8-3. Mississippi State fell to 11-9 and 3-7.

UK senior guard Ed Davender knew exactly how to handle the young Mississippi State team on its home floor Saturday.

"We wanted to put pressure on them, force them into mistakes and take advantage of the mistakes," said Davender, who scored 21 points to lead the 10th-ranked Wildcats over Mississippi State 83-59 in a Southeastern Conference college basketball game.

"The constant defensive pressure finally let us break it open in the second half," Kentucky Coach Eddie Sutton said. "And we played smarter in the second half offensively."

Lady Kats' Fanning takes good with bad

By TOM SPALDING
Staff Writer

It was a bittersweet weekend for Lady Kat basketball coach Sharon Fanning.

Sweet — as in victory. The 12th-year coach locked up her 200th collegiate win Friday night after Kentucky beat Alabama-Birmingham, 76-69.

UK women's athletic director Kathy DeBoer presented Fanning with a bouquet of blue and white flowers and a big chocolate chip cookie with the words "Congratulations coach Fanning — 200th win" inscribed on it.

"It's great," Fanning said. "Winning the game first is always the most significant for me. But it was great to win this game."

But it was also bitter for Fanning, because of a loss.

Kentucky dropped another Southeastern Conference game Sunday at No. 13 Georgia, 86-70.

UK fell to 11-10 overall and 0-6 in the SEC.

For a while Friday night, it looked as if Alabama-Birmingham might cause that cookie to be put back in the freezer.

Kentucky led, 35-33 at halftime, and jumped out to a nine-point lead late before the Lady Blazers made a run.

UAB, 8-9, outscored the Lady Kats 21-10 in just seven minutes and went from a 50-41 deficit to a 62-60 lead.

"At that point, we started to run the break, play well and executed," Fanning said.

UK rallied, going on a 11-1 run to ice the victory. It was only UK's third win in 11 games.

"We hung together defensively down the stretch," Fanning said. "I told them that their 'D' was either going to win it or lose it for us."

Kentucky was led in scoring by its top three players, Bebe Croley, Pam Shrum and Jodie Whitaker. The trio combined for 63 of the Lady Kats' 76 points, led by Shrum's 23 points and 13 rebounds.

"I'm just trying to keep us up," Shrum said. "We started out the season playing well and kind of got into a slump. I think I'm back on track and now (the whole team) is working well together."

Sunday afternoon's game against the Lady Bulldogs proved that statement to be true. With just a few minutes to play in the first half UK trailed Georgia by just two, 35-33.

But the Lady Bulldog defense proved too strong for the Lady Kats, going on a 7-0 spurt to head to the locker room ahead, 42-32.

Georgia then pushed its lead to as many as 18 points, 63-45, in the second half before hanging on with a 16-point victory. It improved the Lady Bulldogs to 16-5 overall and 4-2 in the league.

Kentucky was paced by Croley against the Lady Bulldogs. The senior All-SEC candidate led UK with 18 points and 13 rebounds. Friday night against UAB, she had 20 points and grabbed eight rebounds.

Shrum finished with 14 points and four rebounds. Whitaker, who had 20 against the Lady Blazers on Friday, pitched in with 12 points and eight rebounds.

Georgia was led by sophomore forward Tari Phillip's 20 points. Carla Green added 15 points while Tammy Jenkins and Sherelle Warren each scored 14. The 6-foot-4 Jenkins, the younger sister of Kentucky Wildcats forward Cedric Jenkins, also pulled down 13 rebounds.

But even the loss to Georgia couldn't spoil the moment for Fanning or Jeannie Milling, in her first season as coach at UAB.

"It's a great achievement," Milling said of Fanning's 200th win. "I just hope she remembers to do me the same."

UK's Hahn and Takagi upset in finals of Rolex

Staff reports

Hahn and Takagi, the tournament's No. 2 seeded team, were downed by Arizona's Susan Russo and Betsy Somerville, 7-5, 6-2.

Hahn, a junior, was knocked out of the singles competition on Saturday. She lost to Eleni Rossides of Stanford in the semifinal 6-2, 6-4.

Also on Saturday, UK's team of Richard Benson and Greg Van Emburgh fell to Ball State's Todd Hershey and Eric Nixon, 7-6, 7-6.

Swimmers dunk Kenya

The UK men's and women's swim teams stunned Kenya College in a dual meet at Memorial Coliseum Friday afternoon.

The UK women, led by two first-place finishes from Peggy Gross, defeated Kenyon 68-41 and improved to 3-2 on the season. The men's squad recorded a 60-46 win and brought its record to 3-4.

The meet was the last UK home meet of the season and was the last to be held in Memorial Coliseum. Next season, the swimmers will move to the newly constructed Lancaster Center located in south campus.

UK sets meet record at IU

UK freshman runner Denise Bushallow set a new meet record for the mile at the Indiana Relays this weekend.

Bushallow ran a 4:52.27 to capture first place in the event. Jim Kaiser set a UK freshman record for the indoor 3,000 meters with a time of 8:25.7.

12-year-old hard at work on inventions

Associated Press

HOUSTON, Del. — Clifford L. Hammond III believes that compressed air can drive most anything, from cars to space shuttles. He and seven associates have formed a company called All Purpose Design to engineer and market air-powered products.

He's even written to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and received tips on patenting his concept of an air-powered rocket. All this has happened in the past five weeks.

Clifford Hammond, by the way, is 12. His associates are classmates at Milford Middle School.

His hobby is coming up with ways to power just about anything that moves.

His most recent "invention" involves using tanks of compressed air instead of fuel-burning rockets to launch the space shuttle, reasoning that it would be less dangerous and air "doesn't cost anything."

gus," Gephardt said. "Last Wednesday night in we decided in the House of Representatives, that we couldn't wait until November to change America."

Dukakis, questioned on the NBC program, went a step further, citing treaties banning interference in the internal affairs of other nations in the region.

"That's the framework now and it's a very good framework," Dukakis said. "We have signed and ratified those treaties. We are violating the terms of those documents."

Pressed as to the conditions under which he would tolerate a Soviet client state in Central America, Dukakis said: "If you're talking about the introduction of offensive weapons from the Soviet Union, we have every right . . . to take action against that."

"If they introduced offensive military weapons, then of course we would take action and we have every right to do so," Dukakis said.

The presidential campaign also swung into Iowa's churches yesterday as New York Rep. Jack Kemp sought support in fundamentalist churches, making it clear he's not conceding the evangelical Christian vote to former television evangelist Pat Robertson. Both are courting conservatives and hoping for a third-place finish in today's straw vote of GOP activists.

Jesse Jackson appeared at a Lutheran church in Clinton, working to solidify his ties with other parts of Iowa's religious community.

In other campaign action:

• Former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont joined in an indoor miniature golf tournament that snaked its way through a skywalk system linking buildings in downtown Des Moines.

• Simon, interviewed on the ABC program, defended his proposals for new spending programs and a balanced-budget amendment.

• Former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt, on CBS' "Face the Nation," said he does not think his call for higher taxes has hurt him. "Look, I'm not trying to commit suicide," he said. "My wager is that the American people are ready to listen to candidates who talk honestly."

Something's missing when this is all our young people see of our colleges and universities.

We want them to have a more complete picture.

Kentucky has one of the lowest percentages in the nation of college attendance among adults 18-34. What makes this statistic even harder to take is that a lot of the people who stopped their education after high school never knew what they were missing. Because they never set foot on a college campus.

Ashland Oil thinks it's time our young people were made aware of the vast array of educational opportunities their home state offers. So as part of our comprehensive dropout prevention efforts, we've created an innovative program called "A Day on Campus," which gives students in grades 4 through 9 a firsthand look at what goes on during a typical day at a college or university.

Early exposure to the campus environment can be a factor in motivating children to work toward gaining college admission. And higher college enrollment among our young people is one of the most important things we can do to improve economic conditions for us all.

A Day on Campus can make a lifetime's worth of difference. And you can play a part.

The way the program works is simple. Ashland will fund up to $100 of the cost of taking a student group to the college or university campus of their choice, when that amount is matched by at least two local businesses. "A Day on Campus" has the support of Kentucky's colleges and universities, who will coordinate informative, interesting campus tours.

We think our young people need to see all of the good things going on at our state's colleges and universities. If you agree, visit your nearest Ashland brand station or SuperAmerica store for more information about "A Day on Campus."

Voodoo rears ugly head in horrific 'Serpent'

By WESLEY MILLER
Senior Staff Critic

Wes Craven's new voodoo-thriller "The Serpent and the Rainbow" is a tough film to classify. It's filled with lots of zombies and gore, but there's not as much suspense as the horror-movie fan might expect.

Nevertheless, that lack of suspense does not doom "The Serpent and the Rainbow" to failure. There are several things about the film that do work, mainly because director Craven has a bit more style than most horror filmmakers in the business today.

"The Serpent and the Rainbow," based on the book of the same name by scientist Wade Davis, tells the story of young scientist Dennis Alan (Bill Pullman, whose two previous movie credits include "Ruthless People" and "Spaceballs"), who sets off into the jungles of Haiti to learn the secret of the strange drug tetrodotoxin, which is rumored to be the secret of zombification.

In Haiti, Alan meets Marielle Celine (Cathy Tyson of "Mona Lisa"), a beautiful doctor who leads Alan into the hidden world of voodoo ritual. In his effort to buy the secret of tetrodotoxin, Alan gets in over his head, turning his trip to Haiti into a battle for the survival, not only of his body, but of his soul.

Comparisons to Alan Parker's 1986 release "Angel Heart" are inevitable, and for good reason. Aside from the voodoo plotline, there is a sex scene with Pullman and Tyson that is reminiscent of the infamous Mickey Rourke-Lisa Bonet coupling in "Angel Heart," although the former leaves a lot more to the imagination.

Craven does not have the flair or subtlety of director Parker, but he does accomplish some nice things in the film. His use of Haitian locations is good, particularly in several scenes inside a run-down cemetery. He creates a fairly involving storyline after a tremendously slow start that nearly sinks the film.

The cast is only sporadically effective. Tyson is convincing as the Haitian doctor caught up in voodoo ritual since childhood, but Pullman lacks the star appeal necessary to carry out his role as an adventurous young hero. Also, Alan acts more with his guts (not to mention his gonds) than his brains, which is not a convincing way for a scientist to behave.

Zakes Mokae ("Cry Freedom") is creepily effective as evil voodoo priest Dargent Peytraud. Veteran actor Paul Winfield ("The Terminator," "Big Shots") is wasted, however, in the role of Lucien Celine, a voodoo priest who tries to help Alan combat Peytraud.

The fact that the film is just off-beat enough to keep you from figuring out the ending before it happens seems to be reason enough to recommend it to horror fans.

Just barely.
Rated R. Now playing at Fayette Mall and North Park cinemas.

Psychological 'Julia' stirs senses

By ERIK REECE
Arts Editor

You spend the first half of "Julia and Julia" trying to establish your footing as far as the storyline is concerned. After that, you just quit trying.

The problem is that the story keeps changing. "Julia and Julia" various directions. Julia, played by Kathleen Turner, develops a multiple personality as a reaction to the horror she has witnessed. Hence the title.

In Julia's neurotic personality, her husband is still living and they are raising a son. At the same time, she has an affair with an American photographer played by Sting. When she attempts to end the affair, the photographer is relentless. After he rapes Julia in the shadows of a huge marble pillar, Julia sees murder as her only option, and the photographer catches a pair of scissors in the back. Julia rolls the body into the river in a coal cart. Or so she imagines.

The plots are further complicated by the fact that Julia's aging father-in-law is never told of his son's death. Julia writes him letters to reinforce his misconception that he is a grandfather and that his son is still living.

The fallible narrative never allows for any constants. Julia's sense of time is distorted to the point that she never knows which of her personalities is showing up at the travel agency where she works. And while director Del Monte offers a slight twist at the end, resolution is not his primary concern.

"Julia and Julia" moves along with the slow-pacing that typifies much of European filmmaking. From the initial image of a wedding veil blowing across the screen, the film is rich with images. Del Monte is also conscientious with his choice of lighting, contrasting shadows with sunlight. In many scenes, he exhibits the subtleties of late Godard.

More so than in "The Bride," Sting is effective as the lurking antagonist, but may find himself slowly becoming typecast as an easy villain.

Turner's role will doubtfully be remembered as one of her stronger parts. She at times seems removed from the psychological turmoil of her character. Yet she still exhibits the same anxious beauty as in "Body Heat" and "Peggy Sue Got Married" — two films that parallel "Julia and Julia" thematically.

However, neither have the psychological repercussions of "Julia and Julia." On the other hand, "Julia and Julia" doesn't have their marketability and it will have no easy time finding an American audience.

Promise vs. reality: Education as carrot to gain Wally votes?

Will Kentucky Gov. Wallace Wilkinson please make up his mind?

Evidence A: (aka Pre-election promise # 1): "We will fund higher education at least equal to its present funding, and in addition to that I will make the statement that we are going to put every dime that we can find, additionally, into education. And we are going to work toward — and I said this back as far as last November — full (100 percent) formula funding for higher education . . ." (said before the Kentucky Council on Higher Education on Sept. 3, 1987, before he was elected governor.)

VS.

Evidence B: (aka Post-election fact #1): The percentage of the CHE's formula funding allowed by Wilkinson's budget actually decreases. Currently, the state funds state universities at 88 percent of the formula. In 1988-89, the percentage drops to 80.8. In 1989-90, it becomes 81.5 percent.

Evidence C: (aka Pre-election comment #2): "Now I want to commend higher education, and I say this for no reason other than it is true. I think higher education has done a marvelous job, a commendable job in the last few years in good management, in tough economic times. I think the fat has been rimmed out of higher education . . ." (said to the Kentucky Council on Higher Education on Sept. 3, 1987, before he was elected governor.)

VS.

Evidence D: (aka Post-election comment #1): "I think it's time that the universities reorder their priorities and spend the money in the right places. We're funding them at a level better than their performance now.

"I sympathize with them. If we had more money, we'd give it to them if we could be assured they'd use it properly." (made during an impromptu news conference in Wilkinson's outer office on Feb. 4.)

Evidence E: (aka Pre-election promise #2): "... anyone that can come forward — this council, university presidents — that can come forward and show me how we can improve the quality of any program by supplying more money to that program, I will find it, if it takes all day, if it takes all week, if it takes all month, if it takes all year.

"I do want to make this promise this morning: With the Wilkinson administration you will be able to plan for the institutions of higher education. Whatever it is else that we may do, you can depend upon stability and reliability . . ."

VS.

Evidence F: (aka Post-election comment #2): "What they need to do is get busy and buckle down and reorder their priorities and use their money wisely and stop crying so much.

"I think the presidents are misleading the people of this commonwealth and their own campuses when they go before this committee over there and almost cry about faculty salaries."

Possible reasons to why Evidence A, C and E contradict Evidence B, D and F:

- Wilkinson takes the example of his own success (despite a lack of a college degree) as proof that higher education really isn't all that important.
- Wilkinson didn't do his homework and thus didn't know in September the desperate money situation the state is in now.
- Like many politicians, Wilkinson made those September promises to get votes; he doesn't think he is expected to keep them.
- (All of the above.)

Career day

The College of Communications, in conjunction with the Career Planning and Placement Center, is sponsoring a Career Day. It will be held Wednesday, April 20 from 9 a.m. to noon on both floors of the Enoch Grehan Journalism Building. It is designed to be an information exchange between students and prospective employers, not an interview day.

"Our goal is to encourage students to participate and interact with employers. . . . The employers will be here to expose students to the diversity of possible careers in communications fields," said Kathy Yancey, coordinator of the event.

There are many fields in communications that many students do not know about. The employers will clarify exactly what skills are important for students to develop while in college. They will also give students an idea of what the job market is like in their respective fields.

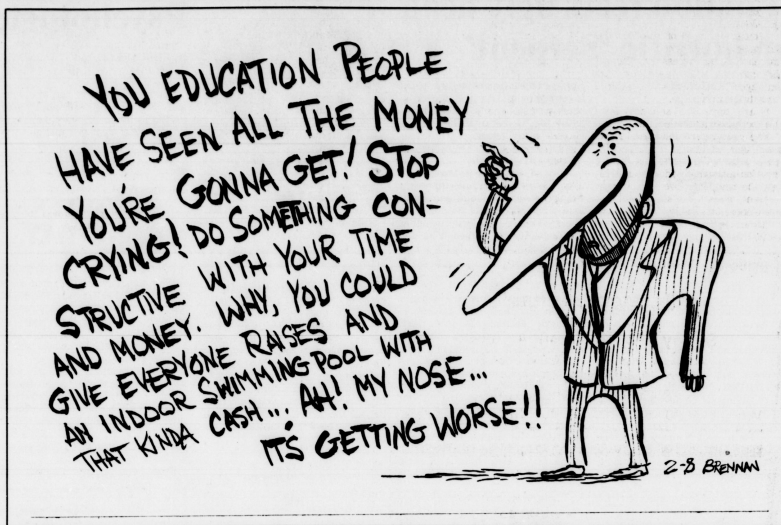

There are a few main categories of companies that will be heavily represented. These include public relations firms, advertising agencies, local corporations, hospitality services and the media: TV stations, radio stations and newspapers.

Specific companies are presently being invited to participate. For this project to be a success this year and in the future, student input is requested. If you know of any company that you would like to see represented, please send a request by Feb. 17 to the Department of Communications Honor Society, 227 Grehan Building, UK, Lexington, Ky. 40506.

Doug Kramer is a communications and public relations junior.

Wasteland

Too much importance placed on outcome of Iowa caucuses

The weather tonight in Lexington is expected to be typical for February — cold temperatures which will keep most Lexingtonians indoors.

But compared to the conditions in Iowa, the Bluegrass state will seem like spring. However, the frigid weather will not prevent about 200,000 Iowans from turning out at schools, living rooms and fire stations to participate in what has been foolishly called by some "the purest form of democracy."

Tonight, America finally gets down to business doing what it has been preparing to do for more than two years as the Iowa caucuses finally get underway.

Modern Americans first learned Iowa existed for reasons other than corn, college football, high school wrestling and girls basketball when an obscure candidate by the name of Jimmy Carter was catapulted into the Democratic limelight with his impressive showing in the 1976 caucuses.

Since then, Iowa has been vital to the nomination process as campaign contributions and media attention.

Those who claim that the Iowa caucuses are good for the nomination process point to how candidates cannot politically afford to ignore any voter. The corporate executive is treated with the same respect as the little old lady who plays bridge each Wednesday.

Besides, the argument goes, Iowans are highly educated people who are up on what is going on in the world around them, and therefore know who the best candidates are to be elected president.

However, the Iowa caucuses force candidates to pour an extraordinary amount of time and financial resources into a state that really does not represent the average American voter.

And if by some chance he or she should not place first or second, they are all but written off by the media, and the nation is forced to rubberstamp a candidate chosen by 2 percent of the voters.

The Iowa caucuses are particularly damaging to the Democratic Party. The "mainstream" Iowa Democrat is more to the left than what the Democratic Party needs to be on a national level, if it is ever to regain the White House.

Although Iowa State Democratic Party Chairman Bonnie Campbell has said an Iowa Democrat is no different from a Democrat in Arizona or Mississippi, polls show otherwise.

The population of Iowa is also mostly white, protestant middle-class. With blacks and Hispanics figured to play a vital role in the future of the Democratic Party, Iowa could not easily be called a "sample" of the Democratic party. (Blacks and Hispanics make up about 2 percent of Iowa's population.)

National Republican leaders are not complaining too much about Iowa, though. After all, Bob Dole and George Bush seem to be in good shape and both probably could win the general election.

But perhaps the Republican Party will begin to feel the same way as the Democrats if an extremist — i.e. the Rev. Pat Robertson — would win a plurality of the vote in Iowa. Then there might be a bipartisan effort to change the nomination process.

The real problem with the Iowa caucuses is that there really does not seem to be any clear alternative.

Michigan Representative Sander Levin has proposed the idea of dividing the nation into six regions and holding primaries from March to June. Under Levin's proposal, each region would take turns in going first in the nomination process.

However, Levin's idea would require candidates to spend much more time and money — which they have already been restricted in doing — on a much larger region. And the media would no doubt cover the event with a win-lose mentality, making the first selected region nothing more than a large Iowa.

Of course, we could always go back to the days when local party machinery decided who was suited to be president, but would it be healthy to experience a deja vu of the days of Richard Daley?

that Susan Bridges and Cyndi Weaver were hostile toward Dixon and "alienated themselves" from Brad Dixon. I never said this!

All I said was that "Brad was on the opposite side of last year's election and probably felt alienated from Cyndi and Susan." This was all I said about Susan. I also did not say that Dixon and Weaver were knifing each other in front of their faces, but I said they were nice to each other in front of their faces and talked behind each other's back.

I realize that many people misunderstand me sometimes because of my speech defect, but if someone is going to quote me for the Kernel, I would appreciate it that person would make sure that he would understand everything I said!

The Soapbox No Class

If Gov. Wallace Wilkinson has his way and gets his proposed budget for the next biennium passed by the General Assembly, UK will receive only about 200 million dollars over the next two years.

According to UK Vice President for Administration Ed Carter, UK needs at least $18 million, just to stay open.

So if Wilkinson's proposal is approved, UK's faculty and staff will likely not receive the payment raise President David Bonds wanted to give.

The Kernel wants to know how UK faculty and staff feel about this pressing issue.

What do you think the University and/or the state should do? Will you be willing to teach or work at a college that is in the same thing out of state for some money? Or will you be looking for and hope for better things in the next biennium?

Submissions to "The Soapbox" will be printed on the next issue of the Kernel, Feb. 11.

Letters and opinions must be typed, double-spaced, and must be included for the verification of the writer. No material will be published without verification.

No one can answer budget question

By MARK R. CHELLGREN
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — Like a call to arms among some medieval sect, a chant has gone up among those who worship at the Capitol.

"Adopt the federal tax code!"
"Adopt the federal tax code!"
It has become such a popular incantation that the true believers can be heard to mutter it almost constantly, sort of like a mantra to a Hare Krishna.

The whole idea has taken on almost mythical proportions. If the believers are to be believed, that single, simple act would open the door to the magic kingdom where money is plentiful and all budget wishes can be granted.

But like most myths, it does not bear up well to close scrutiny.

According to the latest projections, if Kentucky were to adopt the federal income tax code and keep its present tax rates, the General Fund could be expected to take in about $10 million more in revenue in fiscal years 1989 and 1990.

The money would not come from higher rates, but from the loss of many deductions and changes in ar-

... into retirement programs for state employees and teachers. Administration officials argue that the difference will not mean a thing to current or future retirees, but the proposal has still prompted a deluge of protest.

The administration also proposes the use of $35 million each year from the Road Fund to pay for state police patrol activities. Highway contractors are, to put it mildly, distressed.

The budget proposes to take $19 million in 1989 from a special fund established to pay salary supplements to police and firefighters who receive special training.

These three actions alone raise an estimated $93 million in the 1989 budget scheme presented by Wilkinson.

Furthermore, this scenario does not even take into account the other unusual measures proposed to raise money by the Wilkinson budget, such as speeding collections of sales and income taxes in 1989 to get a one-time shot of $30 million.

Thus, even if the federal code is adopted, the entire tax increase could end up going to cover the three items mentioned above.
