Walking the plank

A child's life is full of stories about pirates sailing the seas and walking the plank and of Robin Hood haunting Sherwood Forest and scaling the trees. Katie Haggard, 10, of Cooperstown Apartments, put the two adventures together as she used a plank of wood to scale a tree. Fortunately, the 'seas were calm and the 'forest' was quiet on this summer afternoon.

Brown OKs desegregation

By HERBERT SPARROW
Associated Press Writer

FRANKFORT — Gov. John Y. Brown yesterday approved a progress report on Kentucky's plan to fully desegregate its public universities.

The action paves the way for the report, approved earlier in the week by two review panels, to be sent to the U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights to meet an approaching deadline.

Gary Cox, Deputy Director for Governmental Affairs for the Council on Higher Education, said the plan will be delivered by Tuesday to officials of the federal agency in Atlanta.

The civil rights office, in provisionally approving a federally ordered desegregation plan for Kentucky in January, required the state to meet a series of commitments to implement the plan by the end of this month.

The report concludes that those commitments have been met. It was approved Monday by a special oversight committee and by the executive committee of the Council on Higher Education.

Brown, in a letter to William H. Thomas, the Atlanta regional director of the civil rights office, said, "I am satisfied that Kentucky has made and will continue to make substantial progress in implementing the plan."

Most of the August deadlines dealt with commitments to enhance Kentucky State University, Kentucky's only historically black university.

Brown praised the new leadership at Kentucky State, headed by Raymond Burse, the interim president, for its role in the plan's progress.

"The dynamic new leadership at Kentucky State University — in place since July 1 — has quickly moved to shape that institution in a manner completely consistent with the plan," Brown said.

It also said Kentucky State has the cooperation of other state universities in developing certain program offerings, such as a graduate education center.

Kentucky was directed by the federal government in January 1981 to remove all vestiges of segregation from its higher education system.

Kentucky officials hope the progress report will enable the state to receive final approval of the plan.

Cox said it is not known when federal officials will comment on the report. "I think it will take them some time, given the length of the document," he said.

Kentucky must continue to file annual progress reports on the plan for the next five years.

215 on waiting list

Housing demand lessens

By KATHIE MILLION
Special Projects Assistant

A residence hall administrator said she expects to place all of the students on the waiting list for on-campus housing by the end of the week.

Rosemary Pond, the assistant dean of residence halls, said this year's housing situation is "nothing compared to last year's. Housing is more available."

This year there are 215 students on the waiting list, compared to 349 last year. Pond said that when the no-show list is compiled tomorrow, there will probably be enough housing.

Pond said there are 79 male and 46 female freshmen seeking on-campus housing and 90 male and no female upperclassmen seeking housing.

"In all probability (we will) house everyone that applied," Pond said.

She said the priority for housing is determined by classification and the date the student applied.

She said on-campus housing is usually obtained if applications are sent in early.

Pond said the reason the residence hall situation is much better this year is because of the economy. She also said many students don't want to wait for on-campus housing and go out and get apartments.

Pond said the residence halls' offices and the housing office work together to make housing more appealing.

"We take pride in our operations," she said. "We work hard at making residence halls more attractive."

Pond also said students can get a list of apartments and rooms in the off-campus housing office, 515 Patterson Office Tower.

Pond said the University will not develop more housing in the future because "enrollment will stay on an even keel or even decline."

Man commits suicide at mortuary

LEXINGTON — An elderly man drove to a mortuary yesterday, handed a list of funeral instructions to a receptionist and shot himself to death, witnesses said.

Fayette County Coroner Chester Hager identified the man as William A. Combs, 71, former president of a Lexington lumber company.

Hager, who ruled the death a suicide, and police found the body in a parking lot behind the W.R. Milward Mortuary, 159 N. Broadway St. They said he was holding a pistol in each hand.

Combs' note ordered a simple service with cremation instead of burial.

Kennedy to speak at Louisville rally

LOUISVILLE — The nation is expected to vote Democratic in 1984 because "Reagan's policies aren't working and neither are the people," a Kentucky congressional candidate said yesterday.

Terry Mann, a state representative from Newport who is challenging Rep. Gene Snyder, R-4th District, in the November general election, spoke at a press conference called to announce a Sept. 7 appearance by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., at a fund-raiser here.

"It's costing the taxpayers $99 billion to correct Reagan's programs," Mann said. "I think it's time we returned to fairness. . . I think people are ready."

The rally will be "the most unified Democratic effort the state has seen in a long, long time," he said.

Proceeds from the $100 per person reception will help finance the campaigns of Mann and two other Democratic candidates for Congress in the fall election.

Congressman resigns after indictment

NEW YORK — Rep. Frederick Richmond, one of the richest members of Congress, resigned from office yesterday after pleading guilty to federal charges including income tax evasion and marijuana possession in a deal to avoid further prosecution.

The 58-year-old Brooklyn Democrat faces sentencing Nov. 12. The maximum penalty on the charges is seven years in prison and $20,000 in fines.

Richmond's pleas in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn ended a seven-year congressional career that was marred by a 1978 sex scandal and more recent allegations of financial and other improprieties.

Richmond pleaded guilty to three counts, resigned from Congress and agreed to take steps to withdraw his name from the Sept. 14 primary ballot in exchange for the government's promise that no further charges would be lodged against him.

A federal grand jury had been investigating a variety of allegations against Richmond, including charges that he received cocaine from congressional aides and illegal payments from Walco National Corp., a timber and tool corporation he controlled.

Today will be sunny and pleasant with a high in the low 80s. Tonight, partly cloudy skies are predicted with a low in the mid 60s. Tomorrow, there is a 50 percent chance for thundershowers with a high in the low 80s.

Gary Sandy happy with life on the air

By JOHN GRIFFIN
Arts Editor

From a glance, the average person might not be able to tell Gary Sandy from Andy Travis, the character he played on the comedy series "WKRP in Cincinnati." In fact, Sandy himself has found many similarities himself.

"Andy was very close to myself," he said. "He was an ongoing, changing person who was very much like me in many ways."

The fair-haired actor, who was at Starthrowers' Cafe at Euclid and Rose yesterday, is very proud of the series, which has been nominated for an Emmy Award as best comedy series of the year even though it has been canceled.

"The show was exceptional," Sandy said. "It was the work of our director-producer-chief writer Hugh Wilson . . . The reason the show was so good was because he kept in mind that it was all something to be learned from years of suffering."

Though he admired the show, Sandy was not terribly surprised that it was dropped from this fall's line-up, and he calmly talked about some of the reasons for its demise.

"The cancellation 'had to do with the nature of nighttime television," he said. "It's a game of who can be the most popular. You can have nighttime television programming that is not quality, but as long as it's popular it will stay on the air and the networks will be happy."

"CBS used us as a guinea pig. We were moved about 20 times, so it had to do with low ratings. They would move us, and the ratings would go down. We'd get a rating of about 59. Then slowly we'd work our way back up to a 20 or a 10, and they'd move us again. . . You have to let people know when they can expect to see the show. They want to know that 'I Love Lucy' is going to be on their screen every Monday night at 9 p.m., but you can't tell the network what to do."

Consequently, the show was not renewed, which gave

Gary the chance to go to New York. There he encountered a new fight to which he was not accustomed: the fight between the money-hungry producers and the actors.

"The money people tend to screw you for money purposes. You've got to hold onto the magic of the theater, though. They fight you over every step of the way," he said.

Sandy had come to Lexington to dine with some relatives from the area. "My Aunt Rena is here from California," he said, "and Jim (Graft, the owner of Starthrowers') told me that he had just opened a cafe in Lexington, so I thought 'Let's do a little thing here.'"

"I'm big on roots and that kind of thing. I bought my great-grandfather's farm (outside Lexington) which had

Robinson Forest should not be mined

The University's Board of Trustees would be well advised to follow the Aug. 19 recommendation of its special committee and ban mining in Robinson Forest.

The forest, 14,000 acres in Breathitt, Knott and Perry counties in eastern Kentucky, was donated to UK in 1923 and 1930 by the E.O. Robinson Mountain Fund.

Recently, the University has investigated the possibility of selling the mineral rights for millions of tons of coal beneath the forest to coal companies. It is easy to see why the administration and board, strapped for funds, would seek another road for revenue. But at what price?

By mining the forest, not only would the University have been helping to destroy a valuable natural resource, but it would also have been violating the spirit of the donation. Robinson specifically requested the forest be used by the departments of agriculture, animal science and forestry, among others, for the purposes of teaching, demonstrations and experiments.

The committee made its recommendation, however, only after hearing a legal opinion that said mining could be legally conducted in the forest only if all profits went toward the original purposes stated in the trust — and not toward the University's general funds.

To get this piece of legal advice, the committee hired Dr. Jesse Dukeminier, a law professor at the University of California at Los Angeles, to study the situation. Dukeminier was paid $100 per hour for his services. Would not the University have been wiser to spend that money here at UK, rather than give it to a professor at another school in another state?

While the committee should be commended for deciding to ban mining in the forest "under present circumstances," it erred by not taking that one step further. The phrase should be deleted. Otherwise, the issue could come up again — possibly with different results — in future years with a different board or under different circumstances.

We have to wonder what the committee's decision would have been, had the legal opinion stated that revenue from the leasing of the mineral rights could be used for general University funds. Would the same decision have been made?

What if the trust agreement is interpreted differently by someone else later? The future of Robinson Forest would be uncertain, at best.

The Board of Trustees, when it meets Sept. 21, will have to decide whether to pass the committee's recommendation as is, or to stipulate that mining should not ever occur in the forest, even in the future.

How this issue will affect potential donors in the future remains to be seen. But many people may now think twice about making a donation to an institution that attempts to use the gift for something other than the originally intended purposes.

On the brighter side of the Robinson Forest issue, students have proven that when something matters to them, they'll fight for it. The Students to Save Robinson group now has approximately 250 members. Events held last year by the group, including Rally for Robinson Forest, were well attended.

Soviet capabilities not the imminent crisis

Bulbous nose, broad shoulders, mane of white hair, loose-fitting suit. Just before the vote, Speaker Tip O'Neill slumped down from the perch where he surveys the House and took his place in the well of the chamber. There was dead silence. It was 10 p.m.

TRB

He is typecast for the part: a shrewd, stambling old pol who has been in the House 30 years and knows every secret in Washington. He is seen presidents come and go; he's always got a friendly anecdote for his colleagues and shows a fierce partisanship for the underdog.

The worldwide wave of anti-nuclear apprehension has finally washed up here, to the floor of the House of Representatives, and now it is a vote on which of two courses to follow — call for a "mutual and verifiable" freeze of U.S. and Soviet arsenals, or the Reagan administration substitute for a freeze at "equal and substantially reduced levels." There is a big difference between them.

But Tip O'Neill doesn't talk about the difference. It shouldn't be a partisan matter, he says. He is reminiscing. Way back 29 years ago, three or four congressmen went out to Yucca Flats to see a nuclear explosion, he says. They had outlined a three-mile square city in the desert. The bomb went off and the whole thing went up. "Seven seconds later the repercussion hit us and knocked us off our benches. In comparison with what we have today, the bombs that we saw in those days were mere fuses. There is so much strength today that we can eliminate the world."

Tip O'Neill didn't try for oratorical effect. He just told softly what he had seen, and they listened breathlessly. He said that first Russia tries to build up to "equality," and then America is to build it up. Each fears the other, neither dares stop. The only way to stop, he said simply, is to freeze.

They started the roll call at once. It was as exciting as a football game played on the big House electronic tally board. There was an almost exact balance, alternating with each vote. When it got to the end, 202 to 202, a few members changed sides, and Tip O'Neill, who rarely votes, cast a "nay," his first ballot in nearly a year. Even so, he lost in the final reshuffling, and the administration won, 204 to 202. Few think it's the last word on the subject.

That's the paradox of the nuclear dilemma. The situation is too dangerous to allow a sensible remedy. At a press conference Reagan flatly expressed his belief that "the Soviet Union does have a definite margin of superiority." With the tenacity of an ideologue he has clung to that.

The theory of inferiority, of course, goes back a long time. Kennedy campaigned against a "missile gap" that didn't exist. We were also fearful at that time that Moscow and Peking were "monolithic" against a common enemy, the United States. Gairberth calls it "the parochial and endlessly reiterated anti-communism of the Dulles era."

Reagan's attack on the proposed Russian gas pipeline genuinely startled America's allies in Western Europe. I was in London last month when Reagan traveled through in connection with the Versailles summit, and he made a carefully crafted, low-keyed, and excellent speech there, which seemed to put most of our suspicions to rest. Then he returned to America and began the fight against the pipeline.

I do not see how he can win this argument. The Russians can build without American technology and our effort to prevent our allies from selling equipment seems doomed.

It fits into the larger question of arms control: There is hardly a more fundamental issue dividing the democratic alliance. Alexander Haig, former secretary of state, told the American Bar Association convention recently that we must beware "a confrontational mode with traditional friends and allies." He mentioned no names.

There are plenty of problems in the world right now besides confrontational challenges with Moscow. Here are two of them.

The global banking system is awash with IOU's from poor countries that they may not be able to honor. The debts are mostly owed to affluent financial institutions abroad. The financial structure has held up so far, but there is always fear.

Germany has announced that A.E.G. Telefunken, the giant electronics group, can't pay its debts. It is the largest corporate collapse in Germany since World War II. So far it doesn't seem to be tied to the problem of the developing countries, but this is a jittery time for all world exchequers. Industrialized countries that ought to know better have been living beyond their means. (Italy, for example, has tolerated 15 percent inflation, and the 41st government since World War II has just fallen.)

The second problem is right here in the U.S., where approximately one worker in 10 is unemployed — the highest number since World War II. During this grim summer of 1982 black teenage unemployment in the slums is 50 percent or so.

Who knows who'll throw the first brick? It starts with a minor argument, a warning, perhaps, to a black by a surly police officer. So far, thank heavens, everything has been quiet.

The suburban dweller has troubles of his own. The Dow Jones industrial average has sunk sharply. In the heyday of Ronald Reagan, it looked as though he would solve all our problems. The Dow Jones average then reached 1,024.

That's not the same as losing your job, of course, but it's a tremendous diminution of stored-up optimism, not to mention physical assets, and it makes a lot of investors wonder what's going on in Washington.

TRB is the pen name of Richard Strout, a Pulitzer Prize-winning reporter who has been with the Washington bureau of the Christian Science Monitor since 1921. Strout has been writing the TRB column in The New Republic for over 35 years. It is nationally distributed by Field Newspaper Syndicate.

Students are catching Pac-man fever

In a time of tight budgets and rising costs, you'd think it would be logical for people to avoid spending quarter after quarter playing video games.

Andrew OPPMANN

Apparently, that statement is a bit far from the truth. Look at the Student Center. It is expecting to net $35,000 this year from its video games, said Mark Pritchett, Student center assistant director. That's about 120,000 quarters, or about 3,833 average playing hours. But Pritchett says UK isn't even leading the pack in the collegiate video craze.

The 8,000 students at Rochester Institute of Technology, in upstate New York, spent $150,000 via the Pac-Man National Bank, he said.

That's an average of $18.75 per student, or 75 games per year compared to UK's meager $1.56 — an average of about six games a year per student.

Or, take the University of Tennessee at Knoxville. Their 30,000-student population spent $60,000 on 33 machines. University of Florida students spent a whopping $325,000 on 40 machines.

Taking these figures into account, is UK falling behind in the video jackpot?

"For the number of machines we have and the amount of space we have, we're doing quite well," Pritchett said.

And that space has recently increased with the conversion of an old storage room on the second floor into the student center arcade — with a blue interior and beaming blacklights.

"I recommended we expand them (video games) because of their potential income," he said. The games grew from a few pinball machines in the first floor pool room to their own special spot.

From the machines' $35,000 annual income, UK nets an impressive 57.5 percent cut of the till — a little over $20,000. But what happens to UK's 14-cents-of-every-quarter spent?

"The money goes for building operating costs and to pay for student wages and custodial positions," Pritchett said. "It all goes back to the Student Center."

And, with upkeep on the new Student Center Addition added to the spending list, Pritchett hopes the new arcade will lure lots of quarters to keep Pac-Man munching. The University will pocket the change.

"I'm sorry, sir, but he's not your roommate," said the kind but slightly hassled receptionist at my dorm when I was about to move in.

"What do you mean?" I responded. "We applied in early August last year. We submitted our applications simultaneously. We signed 14 forms, two contracts and a written agreement stating we won't destroy any furniture or burn the dorm down."

"I'm really sorry," the still kind, still slightly hassled receptionist said. "Your roommate has been placed in the room next door. Call Housing."

Housing was both slightly frazzled and slightly nice.

"Listen," the office worker said, "I don't know what happened. But you will have to wait a few weeks and the person you're with now and the one he's with now, along with you and the person you want to room with will have to sign a formal agreement certifying the switch."

"But," I cried, "we applied in early April. We signed 24 forms, four contracts and two blood-bond promises with Billings and Collections."

"Sorry," she said, receiver near-ing the phone hook. "Try again in a couple of weeks."

Fiction? As a matter of fact, it is. But the plot is somewhat based on the problems I had moving in. And the hero of the real-life plot was Rosemary Pond, associate dean for residence hall life.

In the end, everybody lived happily ever after. Thanks again for solving another housing crisis, Rosemary.

Correspondence classes in demand

By JEFF HINTON
Staff Writer

Students throughout the world attend UK classes, and nobody ever sees them. Each fall about one thousand letters fill administrative mailboxes from foreign students requesting correspondence courses.

According to Earl Pfanstiel, director of the program, students from many countries take the courses because they are unable to enter colleges in their countries. "Unlike the U.S., people in other parts of the world don't have an opportunity to go to college," Pfanstiel said. "That's a privilege reserved for the elite."

He said that for people who want to learn but cannot because of location and culture, independent study may be the only access to education.

"Correspondence courses have become the last outposts of literacy," Pfanstiel said.

The University advertises worldwide. This enables students to see what the extension program offers. "Some courses are hard to find, and only certain colleges and universities offer them. UK has some courses in agriculture, which might not be offered anywhere else," Pfanstiel said.

One problem for foreign students, however, is that the courses are designed for graduates of American high schools. Some students have difficulties in writing and understanding English.

"Students who take English as a second language have a hard time making it." Pfanstiel said another problem is that the students don't understand American education.

"In other countries students have to sit for examinations before any type of degree is given them. What they don't understand is our program doesn't offer a degree and the student doesn't sit for an exam. The independent study program is designed for students who want some type of formal education but find it impossible to go through the regular classwork."

West Virginia University rescinds fraternity ouster

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — A West Virginia University fraternity that was placed on probation after a student was severely burned during an initiation rite has been reinstated as an active student organization, school officials said yesterday.

Robert McWhorter, dean of student services, said the university's Student Organization Committee recommended that Sigma Phi Epsilon's probation be lifted as of Monday. Under the probation, the fraternity was not able to recruit new members, participate in intramural activities or use WVU facilities.

John E. Payne, a former WVU student, suffered burns over 35 percent of his body Jan. 9 during an initiation ceremony that fraternity members later described as a national Sigma Phi Epsilon tradition.

Fraternity members had smeared a small amount of alcohol on Payne's chest and then ignited it, intending to cause a sudden but harmless flash. However, the flash caused a member holding a bowl of alcohol over Payne to spill it on him, and the Elliot City, Md., student was seriously burned when the liquid ignited.

Following the incident, the fraternity was placed on probation and also was directed to eliminate "the handling of flammable material from the ritual," McWhorter said yesterday.

The Student Organization Committee, which investigated the incident, concluded that the fraternity was innocent of hazing, defined as intending to do bodily harm. However, the committee said the fraternity acted "imprudently by engaging in potentially dangerous and hazardous initiation activities."

McWhorter said that under stipulations contained in the reinstatement recommendation, the fraternity must make periodic reports to the student committee and abide by the rules of the University Safety Committee.

Meanwhile, attorneys say it could be six months or more before a trial date is set for hearing of Payne's $2-million suit against the fraternity and two individuals.

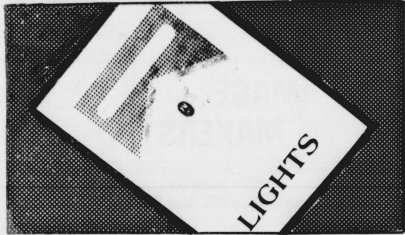

Marvin Elin, Payne's lawyer, said the student is seeking $1 million in compensatory damages and $1 million in punitive damages.

Smoking researcher wants volunteers

Students may be able to earn $30 for 90 minutes of their time by participating in a medical research project on campus.

Dr. Ray Bridges of the oral biology department is conducting the project. According to Judy Combs, a lab technician involved in the work, the researchers take blood samples and determine subjects' lung capacities.

The project began during the spring and will continue for about another year, Combs said. She said the project needs males who either have smoked for at least 10 years or have never smoked heavily. Participants must complete a questionnaire, which takes about 30 minutes; the researchers will call the volunteers when needed. The examination takes about one hour.

Applicants will be rejected if they are taking large amounts of medication or have respiratory ailments.

Those interested can call 255-0650 or visit the researchers at 448 Medical North Building at the Medical Center. Office hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays.

like it a lot," he said. "The people in Ohio aren't going to like that very much, but I think it's terrific. Every summer we would go to Kentucky to Grandma's house, so I sort of grew up in Kentucky. In reality, I was born and raised in Ohio, but Kentucky has always felt like it was my home. I know that sounds schmaltzy, but it's true."

The success that Sandy has garnered from the television show has not changed him, and he doesn't believe it will in the future. "The more successful an actor becomes, the more he tends to become a public relations person for himself. He's constantly selling himself to people, and the more he's going to be booked up. I'm aware of everybody that touches me, but peripherally, I may not have the time for all of them."

"It is increasingly more difficult to get to everybody who wants to know who and what you are. All I want is to be the best actor I can possibly be. I basically love everybody, and I want to give them the best performance possible. I always do 100 percent, and I want to be as versatile as possible."

To demonstrate this range, Sandy recently returned to the stage in Joseph Papp's revival of Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Pirates of Penzance."

"Most people have said, 'Wow. You're trying to prove yourself on the stage.' And they don't realize that I come from the theater," he explained. "I've been in over 60 plays, and 'Pirates' was just another role. . . It was an exceptional role and a lot of fun."

Many people don't know that Sandy's acting career began long before the "WKRP" series. "I've been in the business for a long time," he said. "I'm 36 now, and I've been working since I was 20. It took me a long time to build up some sort of respect of who and what I am. . . I'm just trying to be professional and stick around for a long time like Henry Fonda did."

Therefore, Sandy plans to keep working whenever possible, although he does not anticipate doing another series in the near future. "Everyone wants to do feature films, and I'm all for that," he said, "and I'm also after getting some good scripts."

Marines overseeing evacuation

More guerrillas exit Beirut

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — U.S. Marine peacekeepers smoothly took over Beirut's port yesterday and guarded the evacuation of nearly 1,000 PLO guerrillas, who left the Israeli-ringed capital by sea for Arab sanctuary after a thunderous send-off.

Nearly eight hours after the 800 leathernecks swarmed ashore at dawn and took control of the port from French paratroopers, about 560 Palestine Liberation Organization fighters brandishing automatic rifles boarded the Cypriot passenger ship Sol Georgios bound for the Syrian port of Tartous. They jammed the decks and chanted "revolution until victory!"

Two hours later, an estimated 400 guerrillas left aboard the Greek ship Nereus, waving Palestinian flags and portraits of Yasser Arafat, the PLO chairman. PLO and Lebanese government spokesmen said the Nereus is headed for Sudan.

In Tel Aviv, the Israeli military command reported an Israeli soldier was killed by a sniper Tuesday night at the Galerie Semaane crossing point between East and West Beirut, where PLO and Israeli forces face each other a few dozen yards apart. But there was no indication Israel would retaliate by attacking PLO targets or stop the evacuation.

In Damascus, the Syrian government warned Bashir Gemayel, Lebanon's Christian president-elect, against signing a peace treaty with Israel. Gemayel, whose Christian forces supported Israel's June 6 invasion, has been quoted as saying he wants peace with Israel after he takes office Sept. 23.

A similar warning to Gemayel also came from Saudi Arabia.

Between 7,100 and 7,500 guerrillas are slated for dispersal in the Arab world under the plan worked out by Philip C. Habib, the U.S. special envoy, after nine weeks of negotiations.

By Lebanese and PLO count, about 4,200 guerrillas have left for new homes in Jordan, South Yemen, Tunisia and Iraq since the operation began Saturday.

PLO and Lebanese spokesmen first reported the Sudan-bound contingent would total about 800. But correspondents watching from rooftops overlooking the harbor estimated 400 guerrillas boarded.

PLO and Lebanese government sources said the sudden cancellation of overland evacuation plans forced a last-minute change of schedules and destinations for Syria-bound guerrillas, who balked at riding the Beirut-Damascus highway because they feared ambushes by Christian militias.

About 1,000 guerrillas slated to go to North Yemen also were delayed until a large enough ship could be chartered.

Hani El-Hassan, Arafat's political adviser and chief negotiator in talks that led to the evacuation, said Habib was unable to arrange the overland trip "according to the commitments in the agreement."

El-Hassan, high-ranking member of the PLO's main Fatah faction, was the first senior guerrilla leader to leave since the evacuation began.

Leftist Lebanese militiamen allied with the PLO fired deafening barrages of cannons, machine guns and rocket-propelled grenades in what has become the farewell to departing comrades-in-arms.

"We leave with our heads up," El-Hassan said. "The PLO will continue the struggle from the new arenas awaiting us. We were born without a fixed base and shall continue to be the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people anywhere we are."

Director sets auditions for 'La Ronde' cast

Auditions for the Arthur Schnitzler play "La Ronde" will be held from 7 to 11 p.m. tomorrow in the Guignol Theatre in the Fine Arts building.

There are parts for six women and six men. Any person wishing to audition should sign up for either a 7 to 9 p.m. or a 9 to 11 p.m. audition on the Green Room call board.

Rhonda Blair, a theater instructor, will be directing "La Ronde" this fall. "This turn-of-the-century play is a story of relationships between men and women of varying classes and occupations," Blair said.

The play is also about the way these people are unfaithful to each other and themselves, she said.

"La Ronde" will be presented Oct. 14-16 and 21-23.

For further information about the auditions or the play, contact Blair at 257-3297.

Recreation department gets new director, organization

By JASON WILLIAMS
Staff Writer

The campus recreation staff is ready to begin the semester with a new director and a reorganization of departments.

Bill Pieratt, former associate director of campus recreation, has been named director of campus recreation, replacing Bernard "Steeter" Johnson, who retired June 30.

With the change comes a shift in duties for other staff members as well as the creation of a new position—director of club sports.

Club sports, once part of the director's duties, will be the responsibility of Becky Headley. The new position was made possible by an increase in the recreational budget.

Russell Pear, formerly in charge of intramural sports, became Pieratt's associate director. Ron Lee, who served as a graduate assistant at the Seaton Center three years ago, is the new director of intramurals.

The Seaton Center offers a variety of recreational features, including a gymnasium with four basketball courts, a universal weight room, a sauna and racquetball courts.

Sports offered include intramural football, basketball, golf and tennis. Those who are interested in participating can register residence halls, fraternities, sororities or independent divisions at 135 Seaton Center.

Any campus organization can participate sports program.

The first intramural event, the tug-of-war competition, is planned for Wednesday. The last day for sign-ups is Tuesday.

Co-recreational competition is the fastest growing intramural activity on campus across the country, Lee said.

Sports offered in this form include golf, tennis, volleyball and handball.

"One of the things I'd like to do while I'm here," Lee said, "is . . . increase some of the co-rec sports that we offer."

Seaton Center staff members keep a tally of how many people use the facilities each month to get an idea of the busiest hours and how to better accommodate the student body.

The winter months are the most popular, with about 14,000 people using the center each month. Attendance during the summer months drops to approximately 4,000 per month. "Some days in the winter are exceptionally high," Pieratt said. "We'll have well over a thousand people in a day."

Number of fans at Reds' game lowest in years

CINCINNATI (AP) — Another low watermark has been reached at Riverfront Stadium in a season that finds the Cincinnati Reds sinking to one of their worst records in history.

Only 8,756 fans paid to attend the Reds' 5-1 defeat by the Montreal Expos Tuesday night, marking the first time since May 8, 1974, that the Reds had failed to draw at least 10,000 fans to a home game.

The Reds, who boasted the best record in the major leagues last season with a 66-42 mark, fell to 48-78 with the loss Tuesday, the worst record in the National League. Rain delayed the game twice.

The attendance of 8,756 was the 17th smallest pro baseball crowd in the history of Riverfront Stadium, which opened in June 1970. It was only the fifth time since 1972 that the club had attracted fewer than 10,000 fans to a home game.

The smallest crowd in Riverfront history occurred on April 27, 1971, when just 6,130 people saw the Reds play the San Diego Padres. Tuesday night was the 23rd time a crowd of less than 10,000 saw a game at Riverfront.

After 65 home dates, the club has drawn 1,179,918 fans, an average of 18,153 per home game. That's more than 3,000 fewer fans per home game compared to last season, when the Reds attracted 1,093,730 in 51 dates in the strike-shortened season.

The Reds have drawn more than one million fans in every season since 1970, with the lowest total for a full season being the 1,501,122 that turned out in 1971. The Reds drew more than two million fans for eight straight seasons starting in 1973, hitting a peak of 2,629,708 in their world championship season of 1975.

Ex-teammates somber, uneasy after hearing Kotar's prognosis

By RUTH BONAPACE
AP Sports Writer

NEWARK, N.J. — Doug Kotar's former New York Giants teammates, told that the retired running back is dying of an inoperable brain tumor, were somber and uneasy as they broke training camp yesterday.

"I think about it at night," said Brian Kelley, a linebacker who is one of Kotar's closest friends. "You never know, miracles can happen."

Kotar spent yesterday in the intensive care unit of a hospital run by the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey following a decision Tuesday not to remove the tumor.

Kotar's doctors were cautious in their public prognosis, but a member of the Giants' offensive line, who did not want to be identified, confirmed that Coach Ray Perkins told the team that he was told preliminary tests had indicated the 31-year-old former UK standout had six months to two years to live.

Kelley and another linebacker, Brad Van Pelt, visited Kotar in the hospital Sunday, and they said he appeared to be in good spirits.

"When I went to see him, I was nervous about what to say. I expected him to be depressed," Van Pelt said. "Doug was very cheerful, telling us all about what will happen and how he would be going home in two weeks. I left the hospital feeling great. He had me believing that everything was going to be all right."

"Then, we got word yesterday on how things turned out. I just couldn't believe it."

Kotar retired from the Giants when camp opened July 23 because the separated shoulder he suffered last season had not healed completely.

"He was super. He was in just unbelievable spirits. He was the same old Doug," Kelley said.

"He expected to be out of the hospital in two or three weeks and talked about making the Atlanta game," Kelley said, referring to the Giants Sept. 12 season opener against the Falcons.

"That's why it's so shocking — because he was in such great spirits."

Gordon King, a tackle, said he was too distraught to discuss Kotar's illness. "Our hearts go out for him. We are praying for him," was all King would say.

Kotar, the Giants' fourth all-time leading rusher, had learned he had the tumor last week when he sought medical treatment for headaches he suffered after being kicked in the head while playing volleyball in his swimming pool.

Surgeons were waiting for Kotar to awaken fully from anesthesia to determine whether he suffered permanent damage from the operation.

When doctors opened Kotar's skull, they found a large tumor lodged in the center of the brain and decided that to remove the mass would endanger the ex-player's life, Sloan said.
