Lexington's Second City Directory

During the second decade of the nineteenth century, this frontier metropolis had grown to be the cultural, intellectual and commercial center of the Western Country and had firmly laid claim to the title of Athens of the West. An English traveler described the city in 1818: "Lexington is still considered the capital of fashion in Kentucky. There are many genteel families, a few of which keep coaches. The town on a whole exhibits a well-dressed population, and is regularly built of frame and brick houses. It has an University [Transylvania], brick Mason's hall, several places of worship (three Presbyterians, one Episcopal, one Baptist, one Methodist, one Roman Catholic). Three printing presses where three weekly newspapers are published; a branch of the United States Bank, and two other banking houses; seven mercantile houses and some good taverns and inns."

Of the three newspapers mentioned by Timothy Flint, one was the Lexington Reporter, published weekly and later semi-weekly by William W. Worsley and his brother-in-law, Thomas Smith, at their printing establishment located on Jordan's Row, facing the Public Square. In addition to their newspaper, these enterprising gentlemen published a number of books during the years from 1816 to 1819, some of the better-known ones being Robert McAfee's History of the Late War in the Western Country, and Michael Smith's A Narrative of the Sufferings in Upper Canada, with his Family in the Late War—both of which are scarce and much-sought pieces of early Americana.

In addition to books, pamphlets and religious tracts, Messrs. Worsley and Smith published three of their Ken- tucky Almanacks, now rare, bearing dates of 1818, 1819 and 1820. Lexington's second printed city directory was published as a part of Worsley & Smith's Kentucky Almanac, and Farmer's Calendar for the Year 1819. It bears the imprint of 1818, and was a frail volume of forty-eight pages, nineteen centimeters tall and stitched. This small directory (beginning on page 37) of ten pages lists the pioneer inhabitants, with their business addresses and occupations.

Only four copies of Worsley & Smith's 1818 Kentucky Almanack are known to have survived, these rarities being in the libraries of the Lexington Public Library, the Louisville Public Library, the American Antiquarian Society and the Wisconsin Historical Society.

The "Directory of the Town of Lexington for 1818" is here published in full as it came off the press one hundred and thirty-five years ago. Names of the citizens are not listed in alphabetical order and a number of out-moded occupations, unfamiliar to the present-day reader, are recorded. Some of the streets named in this early directory have changed their names or lost their identity: Main-Cross is now Broadway; Mulberry is Limestone; Constitution is East Second; Mechanic is Saunier Avenue and Jordan's Row was that block of business houses on the east side of Upper, between Main and Short streets. Other streets in the directory, as Walnut, Short, Main, High, Spring, Upper, Water, Mill and Cheapside are the same today as in 1818. The quaint phraseology of the times and the archaic spelling of the names and occupations of Lexington's early inhabitants have been retained throughout this publication.
