

M. CASPER, M. D.
STARKS BUILDING
LOUISVILLE, KY.

Louisville, Ky.
Sept. 13, 1915.

Gen'l Roger D. Williams,
Lexington, Ky.

Dear General:-

I was just talking to LaGrange and they seem to think that we can hold it up there all right. There are two or three other neighborhoods about four miles from the Royal Inn that we have never hunted yet. It lays on the other side of the railroad and is a good place to run. - I believe I told you about Bedford. It is an awfully good place but there is one objection and that is, that it is situated eight miles from the railroad, but they assure us that they will overcome this inconvenience by having automobiles. And, as you know, eight miles is nothing on a good pike like it is, in an automobile. They also say they can get the dogs over and will gladly do so as they are very anxious to have us. I have never heard from Bardstown so I don't know what Stallard has found out. I think we ought to decide at once and wire our decision to "Red Ranger" so that it will appear in the September issue. - If you communicate with Wade and see what he found out further and then let me know by long distance I will appreciate it. I think we can hold it at Lagrange with no more opposition than we have had heretofore:

"Yours hastily,"

M. Casper, per Miss Golden.