Dear Carolyn:

The other day I finally mailed back Leopardi, and perhaps you have him again now. It was with great regret. But I am afraid I just see no way of getting around to those translations, so I might as well face the fact. Perhaps some time in the future.

Fortunately I have some good news: the book on peace, much changed, but perhaps improved, will finally appear in the new volume (with other articles) that is coming out soon. So it worked out after all.

Do you by any chance have in the library, either in French or in English, a book called "Logique et contradiction" by S. R Lupasco? and would it be possible to borrow anything by Tonesco that you have available. I am interested in some of his plays but also in essays he may have written. Preferably in French. I know there might be a run on this stuff, since it is mad, and all that is mad is popular. I would promise to get it back in short order.

I do hope Victor is getting along, and hope to hear some good news of his progress.

Cordial good wishes to you both and all blessings
in Christ,

Tom
