Dear Temple

3^d January 1828.

Sir.

I take the liberty of writing to you to express how highly I appreciate the true spirit of your two volumes of "Nov and Nov". You have done full justice to my nation, which I feel to have been some delightful. Our high literature is very potent in its effect, yet of sorts even, that of France & England has been either wholly profane, exposing the remains of hellish with spurious decent rectitude & familiarity them with the absence of all reference to Christianity, & Christian morality — or fully corrupting the heart with profane gay & vicious. Therefore I did the utmost that lay in my power, to redeem to set an example of the Editor of the J. L. N.

abstract writing, on subjects of awful interest, yet requiring to be constantly presented to the mind, with humble reserve.

I recognize you as a fellow laborer in this good cause, having very early appreciated your excellent lectures, in supplanting vicious papers by one of innocent description with entertainment.
and you have had my good word, such as it is, everywhere.

I have the honor to be,

^{Yours}
Your obedient humble
Servant

Wm. Warren.

M. It is by no means quite a mistake to be on the part of yourself ~~to be mistaken~~ that "New & True" is an amplification of an article by me in Masses called "Who is the Murderer." I wrote that article - but it is no story at all, by a rigidly accurate description & legal discussion of a trial which occurred at the York Assizes, of a remarkable character. Nor did I admit of that paper at all, in writing
"New & True".
